PREFACE.

This edition of Mrichchhakatika is based on all the available printed texts at Bombay, Calcutta and Madras and the various readings given therein are printed in heavier print to attract attention. The Notes are made as exhaustive as possible and the Translation attached herewith will satisfy all possible difficulties of the students. The Introduction too is as exhaustive as can be. An attempt is thus made to meet all the requirements of the University student. The editions brought out by the Nirnaya Sagara Press and by Messrs. Paranjpe and Raddi were useful to me and I take this opportunity of recording my obligations to them. I have also to thank Jivanand Vidyasagara whose edition was very useful in settling several knotty points in the text; Dr. Ryders' 'The Little Clay Cart' and Prof. Wilson's 'Toy Cart' were of immense help to me in bringing out this present edition and I cannot adequately express my gratefulness to them. I am aware of the inaccuracies that might have crept in the book; for these I have to crave the indulgence of my readers. Any suggestions will be thankfully received. Before concluding I must thank my friend, Mr. M. P. Sabnis, B.A.S.T.C.D. whose critical acumen was of great help to me in settling some points in the Introduction.

SECOND EDITION.

Except for a few additions in the Notes and the Introduction, this edition is a reprint of the first edition.

INTRODUCTION.

The initial difficulty with which we are confronted while editing a Sanskrit work is to find a probable date for it. This difficulty common to all the Sanskrit works is further heightened in the case of the मृच्छकटिक owing to the uncertainty and obscurity that hang round the identity of the author. The work divides itself into two distinct parts—the Prologue and the main-body of the drama which are evidently written by two different writers. The writer of the Prologue tells us that the play was composed by a great king named Shudraka, who was the greatest monarch of his time, mighty in peace and war, infalliable, wellversed in Vedic lore and excelling in arts and sciences. This great monarch according to the writer of the Prologue performed an Ashwa-Medha sacrifice and having installed his son on the throne sought a voluntary death by fire at the ripe age of one hundred years. These emphatic assertions are not supported by any authority nor are they corroborated by any other Sanskrit writer. The use of the Perfect (परोक्षे लिट्) however, shows that he is writing about a time at a remote date from his, probably relying for his authority on a certain tradition in vogue in his time. Much credence cannot be given to such a bare assertion at this time of rigorous inquiry. It is necessary, therefore, that we must independently settle the two questions, first, whether in the annals of Indian History there existed a king answering the above description of the writer of the Prologue; and secondly if any such existed, how far he had a hand in the production of the मृच्छकटिक.

First then we must look for all the available references to a king Sudraka in the old Sanskrit works. Our task however, is made easier by Mr. K. C. Mehendale who has collected them together in his paper on 'The Date of Sudraka' in 'The Bhandarkar Commemoration Volume.' According to him the dynastic lists given in the Puranas and collected by F. C. Pargitae make no mention of any Sudraka. Kshiraswamin (1075 A. D.) while commenting on Amara II 8.2 gives a list of Chakravartins among whom the following names occur

विक्रमादित्यः साहसाङ्कः शकान्तकः ।

शुद्रकस्त्वभिभिन्नो वा हालः स्याच्छालिवाहनः (v. l. सातवाहनः) ॥

In the commentary on the Vakyapadiya of Bhartrihari a king Sudraka is mentioned—लोकेऽपि राजपुरुष इत्युक्ते कस्य राजः शुद्रकस्येति प्रश्नोत्तरयो राजपदार्थप्रविभागः etc. The author of the commentary Hridayamgama, while commenting on Dandin's Kavyadarsa I. 15 makes mention of a Sudraka: सदाश्रयम्—हर्षशुद्रकोदयनादिसत्पुरुषतमाश्रयम्. A Sudraka whose life was written conjointly by Ramila and Somila, is mentioned by Rajasekhara. All these references go to prove that a great king named Sudraka was known to old Indian tradition.

The paucity as well as the obscurity of these references shows that such a tradition if it existed at all had not a very wide circulation. Mr. Mehendale next cites a passage from the Aini-Akbari of Abul-Fazal mentioning among the kings of Bengal, a King of Khatri caste named Sudraka, whose reign lasted for ninety-one years, but rejects it as being on face of it unhistorical. Mr. Mehendale's main-stay however, is a passage from Rajatarangini which mentions a Sudraka who was distinguished for his eminent courage and energy. "Kalhana," Mr. Mehendale proceeds to argue, "appears to regard him as coming after Vikramaditya. It is very difficult to say exactly who this Vikramaditya is. The contemporaneity of Matrigupta, Pravarasena II, Menth (or Bharatamentha) and Vikramaditya, indicated by Kalhana, and reminiscences of which are preserved in Sanskrit literary tradition, makes it highly probable that this Sudraka may have lived about 500-600 after Christ, the second well-known blank in Indian history." We are at a loss, however, to make out how this Sudraka of Kalhana can with any degree of probability be placed in the sixth century, or can be identified with the Sudraka who is pointed out to us as the author of the मृच्छकटिक by the writer of the Prologue. In fact the single passage quoted above unsupported by anything that precedes or follows in the rest of the paper appears to undertake to establish the provisional date offered by Mr. Mehendale.

The joint mention of the names of Vikramaditya and Sudraka probably as the supposed starters of two different eras lends some colour to the view taken by Messrs. Paranjpe and Raddi who after having taken for granted that the author was a King named Sudraka on the authority of the writer of the Prologue, identify him with Shimuka, the founder of the Andhrabhrutya dynasty. Their arguments can be briefly summarised as follows:—

"Col. Wilfred, holding, possibly on the authority of the मत्स्यपुराण, that the first Andhra King reigned 456 years earlier than the last, that is Pulimat, who, it is said, died in 648 A. D. and relying on the evidence of कुमारिकाखण्ड of the स्कन्दपुराण which says that a great king named शूद्रक would reign in the year of Kali 3290 i. e., 190 A. D., concludes that शूद्रक must be the founder of the *अन्ध्रभृत्य*s. Dr. Bhandarkar has, however proved that the *अन्ध्र*s reigned for 350 years only, that पुलिमत was a contemporary of Ptolemy who wrote his Peripuls in 151 A. D., and that therefore शिमुक the founder of the अन्ध्रभृत्य dynasty began his reign in 73 B. C. Col. Wilfred's argument has consequently been disproved in every one of its details. But the स्कन्दपुराण, though it may be wrong as regards the date of शूद्रक may yet be right when it states that शूद्रक preceded विक्रमादित्य by 27 years. The tradition which Wilson mentions as being current in the Deccan also says the same thing. Now the first Andhra king reigned from 73 B. C., approximately, and the विक्रम era commenced in 56 B. C., विक्रमादित्य who started the era, if we are to believe the prevailing tradition reinforced by the opinion of many able scholars, might have begun his rule ten years earlier or possibly the date 73 B. C., might need correction. Whatever it might be, the interval between these two great monarchs is sufficiently near the period of 27 years mentioned by the स्कन्दपुराण to render the identification between the शूद्रक named in it and the founder of the अन्ध्रभृत्य dynasty, a justifiable conclusion, when once the truth of the statement of the स्कन्दपुराण is granted. The real name of the founder of the अन्ध्रभृत्य dynasty was शिमुक, but the transition from it to शूद्रक is not at all inexplicable. The monarch is named सिन्धुक in the वायुपुराण, शिशुक in the मत्स्यपुराण and शिप्रक in the विष्णुपुराण, and the भागवत, where also the अन्ध्रs, are enumerated, gives no name, but describes the first अन्ध्र as a शूद्र or वृषल. It is not therefore at all unlikely that the Shudra monarch's name should after so many vicissitudes, finally settle down as शूद्रक, and as he started a powerful dynasty, must naturally have figured in many tales." This view may be accepted as a plausible conjecture, but does not appear to be very convincing.

We shall now see whether we can find any direct or indirect allusions to the drama in any early Sanskrit works 'The terminus ad quem for the मृच्छकटिक,' as Mr. Mehendale puts it, is settled by the following passages from the Avaloka of Dhanika:—

(a) विप्रादीनां शाततैव न लालित्यम् । यथा मालतीमाधवमृच्छकटिकादौ माधवचारुदत्तादिः ।

(b) यथा वा—मल्लशतपरिपूतं गोत्रमुद्भासितं यत् etc.,

(c) कितवद्यूतकरादिधूर्तसंकुलं तु मृच्छकटिकादिबत्संकीर्णप्रकरणम् ।

This Dhanika was one of the literary circle at the court of Parmar Munja of Malwa (A. D. 974-995). Dhanika thus belongs to the end of the tenth century.

which is thus the later limit of the मृच्छकटिक. The earlier limit is however not so easy to settle. वामन (775 A. D.) in his ' Kavyalankarasutravṛtti ' supplies two quotations which have an important bearing upon this line of inquiry:—

- (d) यासां बलिर्भवति मद्रुहदेहलानां
 हंसैश्च सारसगणैश्च विलुप्तपूर्वः ।
 तास्वेव पूर्वबलिरुदयवाङ्कुरासु
 बीजाञ्जलिः पतति कीटमुखावलीदः ॥
- (e) द्यूतं हि नाम पुरुषस्यासिंहासनं राज्यम् ।

The first quotation appears in a modified form in the मृच्छकटिक Act I; but agrees more with the ' दरिद्रचारुदत्त of भास Act 1, 2, of which we shall have to say further on. वामन again mentions a Sudraka whose works along with other supply copious illustrations of श्लेष. He does not tell us however, that this Sudraka was a king. But it can be said that the work was known in its present or some other form in the eighth century. As regards the verse लिम्पतीव तमोऽगानि etc., and the occurrence of the two stanzas Act IV, 14, 15 in common in the 'Panchatantra,' the first of these, though quoted by Dandin in his ' Kavyadarsha is attributed to Vikramaditya by Jalhana and also to Menth by Vallabha-deva in his 'Sharangdhar.' To us it appears, as Dr. Bhandarkar once explained in another case, to be one of those Subhashitas floating about in popular talk about the authorship of which nothing can be definitely said. In the case of the other two stanzas this appears to be the only explanation, as, in the मृच्छकटिक they are introduced with सुष्ठु खस्विदमुच्यते. At any rate the passages are too few to lead us to any definite results.

Let us now turn to the drama itself and see if the style and the contents supply us any clue as regards the date. The presence of such words as पायसाणिष्कारक, बरंडलंबुक, कर्नाटकलह which are not found in the works of Kalidasa, Bhavabhuti etc., lends help according to some to establish a high antiquity for the play. On the other hand, it may be contended that the play, lacking as it does, in the artistic finish of the other Sanskrit master poets might have been written by a poet from the people and for the people, and thence he must have drawn very freely upon the current vocabulary of the time. Hence the words which, though probably known to earlier poets, might have been rejected by them as unsuitable for poetic writing. Another characteristic that has attracted the notice of the scholars is the use of Prakrit dialects on an extensive scale. Mr. Mehendale cites Mr. Pathak who holds that the Prakrit as found in the मृच्छकटिक is older than that occurring in the dramas of Kalidasa and therefore Shudraka must be considerably antierior to Kalidasa. 'This view,' says Mr. Mehendale, 'appears probable in the light of the accidental coincidence of the fourth distich of the मृच्छकटिक Act, IX 33. (धूमकेतुर्विवोत्थितः) with the fourth destich of the कुमारसम्भव X, 33' Mr. Mehendale, however, admits that it is very hazardous to establish any case of borrowing on the strength of an issolated agreement. Messrs. Paranjpe and Raddi have some very pertinent observations on the characteristics of the Magadhi dialect as employed in the drama which we reproduce here—'For the purpose of ascertaining the date of the play, we must see how far the Prakrit dialects in it are identical with those in the Prakrit Grammar of वररुचि, who according to Cowell lived at the latest, in the first century B. C. We have reason to believe that the Prakrit languages underwent a rapid change after the commencement of the Christian era and hence comparison with the dialects noticed by वररुचि will be a good criterion of the reasonableness of our chronological calculation. It will be seen that मागधी in this play is not quite the same as that in the grammar. The ending in दाणि prescribed in it for the indeclinable in the optional forms for अई, the nom. sing. of nouns in अ, and the past pass. participle do not occur in the play, while the change of the sanskrit इट into इ and the अपभ्रंश ending in उ of the nom. sing. forms which occur in the play, are not noticed in the grammar. हेमचन्द्र a grammarian of the 12th century says that इ is changed to इट (as is borne out by the Girnar Inscription) and the अपभ्रंश ending in उ is also noticed by him but on the other hand almost all the other variations from वरुचि which are to be seen in his grammar do not occur in the मृच्छकटिक. We must therefore suppose either that the last two peculiarities were developments that occurred some centuries after वरुचि and certainly long before the period to which the dialects of हेमचन्द्र's grammar belong, or they were provincialisms which were not noticed by वरुचि. The उ is probably peculiar to the Deccan, for the old Marathi has this ending. We are not however, in a position to determine the point. In any case it is clear that the मृच्छकटिक dialects belong to the sixth century A. D., for, हेमचन्द्र formulated his grammar from his knowledge of the Jain Parkrit literature, which was written before the sixth century or even earlier." The temptation to cling to first century B. C., becomes too strong and they conclude rather abruptly with the remarks, " It is also possible that वरुचि's date might be anterior to 1st century B.C.; for Hiuan Tsang places him about 300 years after बुद्धनिर्वाण of which the date is 543 B.C. Hence the मृच्छकटिक can safely be referred to the 1st century B.C."

The state of society depicted in the drama is another ground on which a comparatively early date is claimed for the work. Thus the flourishing state of Buddhism and the attitude of tolerance towards it, a Brahmin allowed to take a Shudra wife, a practice strictly forbidden in Kali, the mention of the promulgators of the science of thieving, the description of the paraphernalia of Burglary, the law-giver Manu quoted, all these facts, it is urged, entitle the play to some comparative antiquity. The data furnished however are too vague and our knowledge of the evolution of the Indian society in its different stages too meagre to arrive at any definite results. As a matter of fact we find that the society painted in the pages of the Dashakumaracharita of दण्डि does not differ very much from that portrayed in the Mrichchhakatika.

So far we have brought together all the evidence collected by the Oriental scholars, in their endeavour to identify the author and ascertain the date of the play. To recapitulate (1) Mr. Mehandale, the latest in the field of research in this direction, relying on a reference of Rajatarangini (राजतरंगिणी) locates शुद्रक (whom he presumes to be the author of मृ० on the authority of the writer of the Prologue) in the latter half of the 6th century. (2) Messrs. Parnjpe and Raddi identify शुद्रक mentioned in the Prologue with शिशुक the founder of the अभ्युत्थ (100-B. C.,) and deduce 1st century B. C., as the time of the production of the play. (3rd) The earliest reference to the work is that of Vaman who quotes a passage from the drama though in somewhat altered form and also mentions the name शुद्रक. All these do not go very far to lift the veil of uncertainty hanging round the drama.

We shall now offer a few conjectures of our own which may be received for what they are worth. It appears to us that मृच्छकटिक in its present form is a later development of the रूपक-द्विचारादत्त brought out by the author himself who for motives about which we shall speak anon ascribed the work to a king Sudraka. चारुदत्त and मृ. are probably the productions of one and the same author-namely भास. This is not the Pre-kalidasian Bhasa of Mr. T. Ganapati Shastri who brought to light the dramas प्रियदर्शिका, रत्नावली and नागानन्द, which at present go as the works of श्रीहर्ष. The दशरूपकs mentioned above perhaps are works now published by Mr. Shastri. This account is also corroborated by मम्मट, the author of काव्यप्रकाश who tells us that घावक (other reading भास) got much wealth from Shri Harsha. Further, history never tells us that the supremacy of the great भास was ever called in question by any body at any time. कालिदास though very reluctant to admit his excellence does not deny the fact that he was at this time regarded as a poet of antiquity, and of established fame. बाण writing centuries later and having probably no access to his play takes refuge behind the श्लेष and declares that भास had achieved considerable success. जयदेव depending more on his powers of alliteration than his direct knowledge of the play describes him as the हास (smile) of the Muses. Whence comes the authority of राजशेखर then who comes centuries later and tells us that this great poet was subjected to the indignity of making one of his works stand the test of fire ?

In the case of धावक भास however the account is probable. The interval between him and राजशेखर is not too great to doubt the authority of the latter; the story again is plausible enough. Here is a शूद्र writer who aspiring to be a great poet met with ridicule and persecution at the hands of people with vested interest. A similar fate is said to have befallen दुकाराम, the शूद्रकवि of Maharastra. Later on हर्ष being struck by the power of the man made him his court poet and published some of his works in his own name. It was probably in the interest of the king that the शूद्र poet should not go down to posterity as the author of any poetic works and his Pandits perhaps were too willing to be subservient to his wish. In this probably lies the reason of the studious silence maintained by the contemporary as well as later Sanskrit poets. राजशेखर, however, who has evidently before him the unpublished रूपक wants us to believe in a भास who was धावक washerman by caste and who flourished in the time of Shri Harsha (7th Century-the first half). The foundation stone on which Mr. Shastri builds the edifice of his theory is the Sloka “ भासनाटकचक्रेऽपि ” of राजशेखर.

Mr. Shastri ought to know that there are other slokas of राजशेखर referring to Bhasa and the one he quotes taken with others may tell us a different tale.

Here are the first:—

कारणन्तु कवित्वस्य न सम्पन्नकुलीनता ।
 घावकोऽपि हि यद्भासो कवीनामग्रिमोभवत् ॥
 आदौ भासेन रचिताः नाटिका प्रियदर्शिका ॥
 निरीर्ष्यस्य रसज्ञस्य कस्य न प्रियदर्शना ॥
 तस्य रत्नावली नूनं रत्नमालेव राजते ।
 दशरूपककामिन्या वक्षस्यत्यन्तशोभना ॥
 नागानन्दं समालोक्य यस्य श्रीर्ष्यविक्रमः
 अमन्दानन्दभरितः स्वसम्यमकरोत्कविम् ॥

Trans.—Poetic capacity does not depend upon wealth or birth, because being a mere washerman भास attained a foremost rank amongst poets. The first composition of Bhasa was प्रियदर्शिका which has been the delight of all appreciating critics who are free from jealousy. On the breast of the दशरूपक damsel his रत्नावली shines like a necklace of jewels. King Shri Harsha on having seen his नागानन्द was filled with great joy and made him a courtier.

Now all these verses have been collected in the introduction to Karpuramanjari by Pandit Durgaprasada and K. P. Parab, together with one cited by Mr. Ganapati Shastri; any of these verses has as much authority as the other: Mr. Shastri therefore was scarcely justified in ignoring them while he determined the authorship of the रूपक.

These verses then plainly tell us that भास was a washerman who flourished at the time of श्रीर्ष्य who made him his court-poet. They also tell us that he wrote with admiration for this poet and tries to vindicate him by telling us that poetic ability does not depend on birth or wealth.

Before turning to the authorship of the मृच्छकटिक, it is but fair to Mr. Ganapati Shastri that we should consider the three main arguments by which he has identified the great भास as the author of the newly published dramas.

The first argument is based upon the following verse of बाणः—

सूत्रधारकृतारम्भेर्नाटकैर्बहुभूमिकैः ॥
सप्ताकैर्यशो लेभे भासो देवकुलैरिव ॥

Now बाण in this श्लोक obviously does not distinguish a drama with a नान्दी, from one which does not possess any. He merely wants to establish similarity between a drama and a temple by means of श्लेष. The former is commenced by a सूत्रधार (stage manager) and the latter too is commenced by a सूत्रधार (carpenter.) If however, बाण can be supposed to be so minute in his description as to notice the minor distinction, his general description of the dramas must be very accurate indeed. We find however the dramas published by Mr. T. Ganapati Shastri are neither बहुभूमिक (full of many characters) nor सप्ताक. (full of bye-plots). The श्लोक of बाण does not lend much support to Mr. Shastri.

The authority of भामह which he cites next instead of helping to improve his position only strengthens the probability of our view of the question. भामह indeed refers to the प्रतिशायौगधरायण while illustrating the न्यायविरोध; but his allusions to कालिदास's रघुवंश and मेघदूत are equally unmistakable. It is evident, therefore, that he lived at a date later than कालिदास. Prof. Pathak puts भामह in the middle of the 8th century as भामह mentions the न्यासकार जिनेन्द्रबुद्धि who lived at the beginning of the same century. Mr. Trivedi has tried to prove that he lived at a date anterior to दण्डि while Prof. Sovani makes him the contemporary of बाण and consequently of धावक भास.

As for the verse नवं शरावं &c. which Chanakya is supposed to have borrowed from प्रतिशायौगधरायण, it is very difficult to believe that a well-known writer on politics would be frivolous—not to speak the profanity of it—enough to put a quotation from what was at the most a popular drama of his time by the side of a quotation from श्रुति. The simpler explanation is that Chanakya must have borrowed it from an extant स्मृति, some other work on politics, and the dramatist quoted the passage from the work of Chanakya at a considerably later date simply for effect.

We have not the space at our disposal to deal with the linguistic argument of Mr. Shastri who confounding the दुष्टप्रयोगs natural for a Shudra poet with आर्षप्रयोग and relying on some obscure passage of some obscure poet makes Bhasa a मुनि or tries to drag the author of the newly published dramas to a pre-Paninian period by asserting that Sanskrit had already ceased to be a spoken language at the time of पतञ्जलि or कालिदास. We believe however that his main arguments have conclusively been proved against him and a case in favour of the authorship of धावक भास has been fairly established. We shall now give our reasons for believing धावक भास to be also the author of मृच्छकटिक. The Charudatta published in the Trivendrum series contains the following passages which show that the poet contemplated the development of a long play out of the रूपक 'चारुदत्त'—

(a) पापं कर्म च यत् परैरपि कृतं तत्तस्य संभाव्यते, Act. I. 6.

(b) संवाहकः—(स्वगतम्) निपुणं खलु प्रत्याख्यातोऽस्मि, कोहि नामात्मना कृतं प्रत्युपकारेण विनाशयति Ibid II p. 44.

(c) सज्जलकः (आत्मगतम्) भोः कदा खल्वस्याः
प्रतिकर्तव्यं भविष्यति अथवा शान्तं पापम्
नरः प्रत्युपकारार्थं विपत्तौ लभते फलं
द्विप्रतामेव कालेऽस्तु योऽस्या भवतु तस्य वा Ibid IV 7.

(d) चेटी—प्रियं मेऽमृतांकनाटकं संवृत्तम्.

गणिका—एहीममलंकारं ग्रहित्वार्यचारुदत्तमभिसरिष्यावहः

चेटी—अज्जुके तथा, एतत् पुनरभिसारिकासहायभूतं दुर्दिनमुन्नमितम्

Now it is more probable that author of the रूपक himself should take up these threads and develop it into a प्रकरण rather than some other should improve upon it at some later date. Again considering the cold reception with which his earlier works were met with by the public, on account of the low station of the poet, it is not unlikely that after recasting his drama by flavouring it with the high flown language of his time (cf description of Vasantasena's apartments) and filling it with a suitable introduction, he might have ascribed it to a king of some known antiquity. We have already seen that वामन quotes from the रूपक and that he mentions a शूद्रक who according to him was a southerner. Vaman, who does not tell us that the शूद्रक he refers to was a king, probably knew the low origin of the poet which is suggested by the epithet शूद्रक. Our reasoning then leads us to धावकभास as the author of the play and the first half of the 7th century as the date of the drama.

Merits of the Play.

As a piece of dramatic work the मृच्छकटिक stands unrivalled among similar works in Sanskrit both for its execution as well as its design. Unlike other Sanskrit dramatists the author of the मृच्छकटिक does not borrow his story from an existing source but has invented it for himself. His originality is further seen by his choice of the title of the play, "The Earthen Cart" which plays such a momentous part in the drama and which nearly proved fatal to the hero of the play, while Sanskrit dramatists title their dramas after their heroes and heroines. The ingenuity, again with which the two plots are blended together scarcely find a parallel, not only in Sanskrit but even in other languages of the world. The story of the Revolution is so intimately interwoven with the main story that it cannot be detached from the latter without injury and yet it is never so obtrusive as to divert our attention from the central idea. The action, though wanting in other unities has the unity of interest and proceeds with a regular though diversified march to its final development. The chief characteristic for which the author of the मृच्छकटिक stands pre-eminent among his Indian fellow dramatists are his variety, his skill in delineation of characters, and his humour. We shall consider each of these at some length. First then about his variety of which we shall have a rough idea, if we refer to the names of the acts of the play. Thus the Shampoor who Gambles, The Hole in the Wall are shortly followed by the Storm and the Change of the Bullock-Carts succeeded by the strangling of Vasantasena. 'From farce to tragedy, from satire to pathos, runs the story with Shakesperian breath.'

The author of the मृच्छकटिक draws his characters from life. He does not hanker after ideal but gives us real living men and women. He draws on every class of society from the high-souled Brahman to the executioner who belongs to the lowest order of society. Again his characters are not types but individualities with special traits which distinguish them from the ordinary people of their kind. Thus Vasantasena is not a typical courtesan, nor is Sharvilaka a common thief. This fact must be borne in mind when we want to test the characters in the light of actuality. Again the characters of Kalidasa and Bhavabhuti are pre-eminentlly Indian whereas those from the मृच्छकटिक are truly cosmopolitan. Shakuntalā is a Hindu maid, Madhava is a Hindu hero but the Samsthana, Maitreya, Sharvilaka and Madanika, are the citizens of the world. We shall later on deal separately with the main characters. In the meanwhile we shall consider the third and the most important feature of the work, its humour.

The humour of the author of मृच्छकटिक is described by Dr. Ryder as having 'American flavour both in its puns and in its situations. The plays upon the words certainly depend upon the language but the situations are independent of language. Humour is seen in all its aspects, from grim to farsical, from satirical to quaint. Its keenness and variety are such that मृच्छकटिक need not fear comparison with the best of the western comedies.'

As a poet, our author cannot be put on a par with the master poets like Kalidasa, and Bhavabhuti. He certainly lacks the rich imagination of the former and stern grandeur and the loftiness of the latter. He can easily secure a rank below these masters. He has a correct eye for Nature and his descriptions both of Nature and things is very graphic and vivid. Sometimes he scales great heights (compare for instance his account of 'रेमिल''s song and his reflections on flute and on sleep.) The style of the drama is simple and direct and is not marred by false taste or ostentation. Nor is it barren or parched having its full share of allusions epigrams, vivid illustrations and aphorisms.

Apart from its dramatic and poetic merits the मृच्छकटिक has an historic importance as it gives us a faithful picture of the time when it was written. That it is a curious and interesting picture of national manners every one will admit. Again it is purely Indian and represents a state of society sufficiently advanced in civilisation to be luxurious and corrupt. We can form definite idea about the powers of a king, the procedure of Judicial administration, the state of Buddhism, and also the prevalent arts, fashions, and vices of the day.

The king was generally a despot. The one in this drama is a tyrant who has his mistresses and favourites. Though these cannot be said to have a free hand in the administration, they had much influence for evil and caused much waste of public money. There was much dis-content and the prophesy was perhaps an indication of a widespread desire for change of government. The tolerance and immunity from common law enjoyed by the masters of the gambling house and the passing of the capital sentence on Charudatta in defiance of मनु who had laid down exile as the proper punishment in the case of a Brahmin criminal are the only direct instances furnished in the drama of the oppressive and arbitrary use of his powers by the king. The latter is not very revolting to our sense of justice in the modern times but that the former must have caused deep misery among people of all ranks is evident from the fate of the Shampoer. The King had to pay penalty of his misdeeds by his head. Next we have a glimpse of the criminal court with its judge administering justice with the assistance of the श्रेष्ठिन् (a sort of alderman) who evidently plays the part of a modern assessor. There is the clerk of the court generally a Kayastha. We have also the servant of law, a sort of Bailiff whose business it is to serve the summons. The searching examination of the complainant as well as the accused together with the amount of circumstantial evidence collected shows us that the procedure of criminal law had reached a definite stage of development. The judges were only the Judicial advisers of the king. The final orders rested with the king. The police administration seems to be very efficient. But for the treachery of Chandanaka, Aryaka could not have escaped the vigilance of the police service.

Budhism was in a flourishing condition and it seems that its followers who had grown in number were not treated with any hostility by the Brahmins. Yet the sudden appearance of a Bhikshu was regarded as an ill omen. The appointment of संवाहक as monk-in-chief of all monasteries shows that the king was the head of the Budhistic as well as the Brahmanic church.

The drama also furnishes us with some inklings of general state of society. We find that commerce in which the Brahmins had a very large share was flourishing and wealth was pouring in the country. The signs of decay had set in. Gambling and prostitution were the fashionable vices of the day. There were regular gambling houses managed by organized bodies with their President and laws, regulations. and tribunals. The person as well as the property of the defaulter were responsible for a debt of honour. Whether the law was equally harsh in the case of common debtor is not seen. Prostitution was also general. Even people of the standing of Charudatta make no secret of their connection with a prostitute. Appearances were however kept in the old days as they are kept now. A prostitute had no admission in the interior of the house, nay her very ornaments or clothes were regarded as polluting the inside of a gentleman's house. The rigidity of the customs of matrimony were slackening: not only could a Brahmin marry a shudra woman but an acknowledged prostitute could be raised to the status of honourable wife. Then there were such fashionable resorts as the पुष्पकरणिकजीर्णोद्यान to which the public had access. Music had attained a high degree of perfection among the specially trained courtezans, for which they were not a little responsible. We have no definite indication about the status or the opportunities of the different classes of people. The epithets flung upon each other by Chandanaka and Viraka during their passage at arms cannot be taken too seriously. It seems, however, that while people of upper classes could follow with impunity any profession from that of an honourable merchant to that of a down right burglar, there was not much chance for a born slave like Sthavaraka or a born executioner like the philosophic Chandala.

Construction

A few words as regards the construction of the play would not be out of place. The play has certainly exceeded the length generally covered by similar works. But it is probable that the drama was acted in two separated instalments which were for all practical purposes complete in themselves. The argument, however, that the byeplot appears to be a mere patchwork on the body of the play scarcely holds water. A revolution alone could bring about a sudden turn in the fortune of Charudatta or raise Vasantasena to the coveted position of a lawfully wedded wife. That the incident of the revolution could be blended in such a manner as to subserve the central idea of the drama is a wonder of dramatic art. Again we cannot bring ourselves to subscribe to the opinion of Dr. Ryder who maintains that 'the main action of the drama halts through acts II-V and during the episodic acts we almost forget that the main plot concerns the love of Vasantsena and Charudatta.' Nothing could be farther from truth as may be seen from an analysis of these. Thus the first scene of the second Act introduces the love-sick Vasantasena who discusses with Madanika her hopes and plans to gain the love of Charudatta. In the next scene the shampooer presents himself who though along with his gambling friends occupies the next two scenes only ends by adding his own testimony to the virtues and good qualities of Charudatta. Next Karnapuraka comes with his own tale regarding the appreciation of his valour by Charudatta alone and the final scene of the act closes with an ardent desire on the part of Vasantasena to have a good view of Charudatta as he passed by her house. In the third Act we see Charudatta at home; we catch some glimpses of his domestic virtues of himself and his wife Dhuta. The central idea is however kept before us if not directly at least indirectly by the frantic efforts of Maitreya to keep Charudatta off the track of Vasantasena. The fourth Act is very short but for the cumbrous descriptions of Vasantasena's palace and in both the scenes Vasantasena is brought more prominently before us. In short while preparing the ground for coming events, the author has never allowed himself to lose sight of the central theme of the play. As regards the absurdity that Aryaka starting later and meeting with an obstacle in the way, should reach the garden half an hour earlier than Sthawaraka need not engage our serious attention. Vardhamanaka must have made haste as Charudatta was waiting for Vasantasena. Sthawaraka cared more for his bullocks than for his master and it is probable that he did not give much trouble to his animals. We shall refer to the supposed oversight of the poet, in making the moon rise at some time before midnight in the first Act and then again making it set at the same time in the third act later on when we consider the time occupied by the play.

The poet is very happy in his choice of material and events which he has judiciously used. Thus the garment which is sent by a friend through Maitreya is worn by Vasantasena who thinks that Charudatta, as he uses such articles is not indifferent to pleasure. This garment again reaches Vasantasena's hand through Karnaparaka who receives it in appreciation of his valiant conduct in rescuing the monk from the elephant. The skill with which the chain of evidence is made sufficiently strong is also very admirable. The ornaments given to Rohasena and returned through Maitreya suddenly turn up in the court creating a great sensation by supplying the last link required to compete the evidence. Again the sudden death of a woman by the fall of a tree witnessed by Vita furnishes the corpse which was discovered by Viraka. The event that proved most fatal to Charudatta was the stopping of his cart by Viraka and Chandanaka, and the belief of the former that Vasantasena was in that cart which Charudatta could not possibly deny without mentioning Aryaka—which would have exposed him to the graver charge of high treason.

Time Analysis of the Play.

We shall now consider the time during which the events of the play are supposed to have happened for all critics agree six days was the duration of the play. Thus according to them, the play begins on the evening of the first day. The second act begins on the morning of the 2nd day. The same evening there is robbery in the house of Charudatta (act. III) and the fourth act commences on the third day. In the same evening Vasantasena meets Charudatta at the latter's house (Act V.) On the morning of the fourth day Vasantasena set out for the Park to see Charudatta (act VI) Instead of meeting Vasantasena Charudatta sees Aryaka (act VII). Soon afterwards Vasantasena falls into the clutches of Shakara who strangles her. So these three acts VI, VII, VIII, take a single day; the trial begins on the fifth day (act IX) and on the sixth day Charudatta is conducted for execution (act X). We think, however, that there must be an interval of some days between the second act and the third act. In the first Act, the moon rises at about ten o'clock at night for while returning from Vasantasena's house Charudatta notes that the streets were quiet and deserted. This shows the drama begins on the 5th or 6th of the latter half of the month. The setting of the moon in the third Act—which again appears to be a crescent moon—at midnight shows that nearly fifteen days had elapsed which time was necessary to make Maitreya feel that the ornaments stole away his sleep and wonder that there was no thief in the city who could help himself with them. Again some time must be allowed to Vasantasena to draw the portrait of Charudatta. In the 2nd Act the portrait is not mentioned at all. Can it be said that the picture was completed during the rest of 2nd day and presented to us on the third day? Later on Maitreya says that he could recognise the ornaments which is possible only if they are the object of his anxious attention for days together. The time of the play therefore must be nearly twenty days. Before concluding we shall briefly sketch the main characters of the drama.

Charudatta.

In Charudatta, the dramatist has attempted to delineate a real man of society with his defects as well as virtues and not merely an ideal hero. Here is a young man, then, who inherited an immense fortune with which he played ducks and drakes. To be sure the greater portion went as large charities to which the great city of Ujjain was bearing testimony. But a great deal also perhaps was spent in dissipation and gambling. And now at the age of thirty or thirty-five he finds himself reduced to the state of a bare competence deserted by friends except one and served by a few staunch and devoted servants who are true in adversity as well as prosperity. Even in poverty Charudatta has an amount of family pride and is very God-fearing. He is also courteous, affable and obliging and the secret of loveliness and popularity lies in these as well as in his personal charms. These traits in his character have been finely evolved both by means of the oral testimony of Vasantasena, the shampooer, Sharvilaka, and Arayaka as well as his own words and acts such as the shielding of Arayaka, the appreciation of Karnapuraka's bravery &c. But Charudatta is generous to a fault. His sympathy towards the thief who believed had gone emptyhanded from his house appears to be a bit overdone. Again though divinely forgiving in prosperity, he does not show much fortitude in adversity. He is perpetually fretting over his misfortunes and is constantly brooding over his poverty which he always wants to hide from other people. Again his feelings for Vasantasena can be hardly called true love, such as is described by Bhavabhuti in his Uttararamacharita. It is merely a passion. His connection with a prostitute which was a matter of surprise to the judge reflects upon his character and we are not much impressed by his palliation “यौवनमत्रापराध्यति न खलु चारिभ्यः.” Again his unjust reproaches directed against the judge who had done everything in his power to save Charudatta and who if he had erred, erred in showing leniency towards him shows the bitterness caused by his misfortunes. Charudatta may be compared to the “Good-natured Man” of Goldsmith or “Charles Surface” in the “School for Scandal” of Sheridan.

Vasantasena.

The one criticism levelled at the character is that it is not true to life. But here we must remember that the poet is delineating a woman who is an exception among those of her kind. Thus born in prostitution she has a natural abhorrence for that evil institution and has much yearning for married life. Vasantasena whose beauty was the delight and pride of the city, is courteous, affable and even generous. She is very clever and accomplished. It is clear that between her and Charudatta it was an affair of love at first sight but she later on based it on the surer foundation of his virtues. Her love is as true as steel and though some blame her for her indiscreet candour when she was facing her mortal enemy, we highly admire her courage when knowing only well that Samsthana was bent upon her destruction, she boldly declared that the epithet ‘love of a beggar’ was a compliment. Again Vasantasena is free from jealousy and she takes an instinctive liking to Dhuta as well as to Rohasena. The treatment accorded by her to her servant is very kind and considerate. And ultimately it gives sincere pleasure to find her raised to the position of a wife.

Samsthanaka

This character is, as Wilson justly describes, the master-piece of the play. He is both a fool and a knave and is a strange combination of ignorant conceit, brutal lust and cunning. A mere contemptible creature, he was raised to power through the means of a sister who had sold her charms to the king. A cold-blooded villain he gloats over the misfortunes of others and takes delight in tormenting others. He is a glutton and coward who was afraid of even the shadow of a man but who complacently boasted that he could kill hundreds of women. He is perpetually blundering but somehow has the cunning to wriggle himself out of the situation. A character so contemptible, says Wilson, has scarcely been delineated. Indeed he is so frivolous as scarcely to excite our indignation; anger were wasted on one so despicable.

Sharvilaka

This character has not much attracted the attention of the critics. It is indeed a mistake to take him for an ordinary thief. He is more like a modern socialist who had declared war against power and property. He never troubled the poor and women were quite safe from him. He was a Brahmin but had made short work with his sacred thread by turning it into a measuring line for breaking wall in a thoroughly utilitarian fashion. He has not been quite reconciled to his new profession, however, and evidently has some qualms of conscience. Though quite ready to dare the king, he is afraid to face Charudatta with guilty conscience. He is a faithful lover and a true friend. He may be compared to Robin Hood of Sherwood Forest or to Rob Roy of Sir Walter Scott.

Madanika

She is also a clever and resourceful maid. She also like Vasantasena yearns for true love and is heartily sick of the life in the वेश that she was leading.

Maitreya

‘ In Maitreya ’ “ says Dr. Ryder ” we find an instance of the author’s masterly skill in giving life to the dry bones of a rhetorical definition. The Vidushaka is a stock character who has something in common with the jester. In Maitreya the essential traits of the character—eagerness for good food and other creature comforts, blundering devotion to his friend—are retained but clarified and elevated by his quaint humour and his readiness to follow Charudatta even to death. The grosser traits of the typical Vidushaka are lacking. Maitreya is neither a glutton nor a fool but a simple minded wholehearted friend.

The minor characters such as the Shampooer, the two superintendents of guards, Viraka and Chandanaka, the judge have also been successfully drawn. Thus the shampooer was a spend-thrift who had squandered a fortune made living out of what he had learned as an art. He is very hasty in forming his resolution. Though hard pressed, his love for gambling asserted itself and then he suddenly resolved to turn a monk. Of the guards Viraka is a grim, straight-forward man ever alert like a watch dog.

He stands for duty. The other man Chandanaka is a mere time-server though a clever and resourceful man.

The judge wants to be as impartial and just as he could be. But he could not afford to lose his place and he knew too well the influence of Samsthanaka's sister on the king to think twice before sending away that wretched informer. During trial he did his best to shield Charudatta and indeed ran the risk of being reported to the king as having a bias towards the accused.

The characters of the servants Vardhamanaka and Sthavaraka &c. are faithful to life. The executioners have been a bit too philosophical for their attainments and situation in life but their constant contact with death perhaps has made them what they are.

[“Act I entitled अलंकारन्यासः Evening of the first-day.—After the prologue, Charudatta, who is within his house converses with his friend मैत्रेय, and deploras his poverty. While they are speaking, Vasantasena appears in the street out-side. She is pursued by the courtier and Samsthanaka : the latter makes her degrading offers of his love, which she indignantly rejects. Charudatta sends Maitreya from the house to offer sacrifice, and through the open door Vasantasena slips unobserved into the house. Maitreya returns after an altercation with Samsthanaka, and recognizes Vasantasena. Vasantasena leaves a casket of gems in the house for safe keeping and returns to her home ” R.]

Every Sanskrit play begins with a नान्दी which consists of one stanza or more in praise of a deity or a Brahman or a king and pronounces at the same time a benediction upon the audience. The नान्दी in the present play consists of two stanzas; the second stanza conveys a hint regarding a portion of the subsequent story. of. ‘अत्राप्यम्बुदवदर्थिसन्तापहरश्चादत्तो विद्युद्रूपया वसन्तसेनयाऽभिगतः इति काव्यार्थ-सूचनमवधेयम्.’ Hence the नान्दी in this play constitutes an अष्टपदा and पत्रावली नान्दी. अष्टपदा and पत्रावली नान्दी are defined in S. D. as;— “आशिर्वचनसंयुक्ता स्तुतिर्यस्मात्प्रयुज्यते । देवद्विजन्तृपादीनां तस्मान्नान्दीति संज्ञिता । मंगल्यशंखचक्राब्जकोकैरवशंसिनी । पदैर्युक्ता द्वादशभिरष्टाभिर्वा पदैस्तु ” “यस्यां बीजस्य विन्यासो ह्यभिधेयस्य वस्तुनः । श्लेषेण वा समासोक्त्या नान्दी पत्रावलीति सा.”

Stanza । पर्यङ्कः—आसनविशेषः a particular kind of posture practised by the ascetics in meditation; it is called वीरासन which is defined by Vasistha:—‘ एकं पादमथैकस्मिन्विन्यस्यारौ तु संस्थितम् । इतरस्मिन्स्तथैवोदं वीरासनमुदाहृतम्, ’ ‘पर्यङ्को वीरासनग्रन्थिरिव (पादोरुसन्धिग्रथितत्वात्) तस्य बन्धाय शैथिल्यपरिहाराय द्विगुणितेन द्विरावहितेन भुजगेनैव आश्लिष्यत इत्याश्लेषः तेन कक्षाबन्धेन संवीतजानोः व्याप्तजानोः ’ ‘स्थिरसुखमासनं’ इति योगानुशासनात् मृदुलभुजगभोगेन

S. III.

" This benediction alludes to the practices and notions of योग in which by abstract meditation (समाधि), the fusion (लय) of individual with universal spirit (ब्रह्मन्) is to be effected, even in the body. Spirit is said to be detached from the Karanas, the thirteen products of matter, or महत् intellect; अहंकार consciousness; and the eleven organs of sense and action. The mode of effecting this union is by sitting in particular asanas or postures; one of which is sitting on the hams with a cloth fastened round the knees and back (पर्यङ्क-बन्ध-ग्रन्थिः); also by suppression of breath (प्राणावरोधः) by keeping the vision directed either on vacuity or inwardly (शून्येक्षण) and by preventing as vigilently as possible the wanderings of the senses." W. The metre of this verse is स्रग्धरा. 'अथैर्यानां त्रयेण त्रिमुनियतियुता स्रग्धरा कीर्तितेयम्'. This Stanza gives a grand description of an ideal deity and indicates a strong faith in the yoga philosophy which, 'in some of the Puranas especially of a Saiva character, is ascribed to Siva who taught it in the person of Sweta, on the Himalaya mountains in the beginning of the Kali age'.

नीलकंठः—Siva is so called because of his dark-blue throat. The colour was the effect of the poison generated at the churning of the ocean which Siva swallowed. The fig. is समस्तवस्तुविषया उपमा 'गरलजनितजगत्सन्तापहरणादम्बुदौपम्यम्', The metre is अनुष्टुप्. For the suggestion conveyed by this verse, see Supra.

नान्द्यन्ते—The term नान्दी is applied to the benedictory verse or verses recited as a sort of prologue at the beginning of a drama. The term is variously defined. Bharata's definition आशिर्वचनसंयुक्ता ॥ &c has been quoted above (2) नन्दन्ति देवा अत्र (3) 'नन्दी वृषो वृषाङ्कस्य जगदादौ जगत्पतेः । नृत्यतः कल्पनायोगाज्जगाम किल रङ्गतां । तस्य तद्रूपसंबद्धा पूजा नान्दीति कथ्यते' इत्युक्ता नन्दिसंबन्धिनी पूजा नान्दी (4) नन्दति समृध्यते नाटयमनया प्रत्युद्वापोहादिति नान्दी (5) नन्दन्ति काव्यानि कवीन्द्रवर्गाः कुशीलवाः पारिषदाश्च सन्तः ।.....तस्मादियं सा कथितेह नान्दी N. P. The words नान्द्यन्ते सूत्रधारः indicate that the drama proper begins, after the नान्दी is recited. It means that after the नान्दी is repeated, सूत्रधार proceeds to let the audience know the name of the play, its subject matter &c.

सूत्रधारः—the principal manager who regulates the thread or rules of the drama (सूत्रं प्रयोगानुष्ठानं धारयतीति or सूत्रं काव्यार्थसूचनं धारयतीति सूत्रधारः) नाट्योपकरणादीनि सूत्रमित्यभिधीयते सूत्रं धारयत्यर्थे सूत्रधारो निगद्यते According to Matriguptacharya, he is चतुरातोद्यनिष्णातोऽनेकभूषासमावृतः । नानाभाषणतत्त्वज्ञो नीतिशास्त्रार्थतत्त्ववित् नानागतिप्रचारज्ञो रसभावविशारदः । नाट्यप्रयोगनिपुणो नानाशिल्पकलान्वितः । छन्दोविधानतत्त्वज्ञः सर्वशास्त्रविचक्षणः । तत्तद्भीतानुगलयकलातालवधारणः ॥ अवधानप्रयोक्ताच योक्तृणामुपदेशकः एवंगुणगणोपेतः सूत्रधारोऽभिधीयते ॥ इति ॥ Originally the practice was that the नान्दी was to be recited by the Sutradhara and after that the mentioning of the play &c was to be done by the स्थापक; but afterwards, both these functions came to be performed by the Sutradhara, himself. "नान्दीं प्रयुज्य पूर्वस्मिन् सूत्रधारे विनिर्गते । प्रविश्य तद्वदपरः काव्यमास्थापयेन्नटः"

अनेन—नान्दीविस्तरणेन. विमर्दकारिणा प्रतिबन्धावहेन that destroys or stifles (the curiosity &c)—'समयातिपातात्'. The manager then starts with his business which is called प्ररोचना—'कविकाव्यनटादीनां प्रशंसा तु प्ररोचना'. आर्थमिश्रान्—मिश्र is added to show respect 'the respectable gentlemen assembled here.'

मृच्छकटिकं—मृद् 'clay' and शकटिका 'a little cart', 'a toy cart'.
 'चारुदेत्तपुत्रस्य रोहसेनस्य क्रीडनकं मृण्मयं शकटं षष्ठेऽङ्के वक्ष्यमाणमस्त्यत्र प्रति- पाद्यतयेति मृच्छकटिकं'. It refers to a toy belonging to the child of Charudatta, which plays an important part in the drama. This cart, Vasantasena fills with her ornaments, so that Rohasena, Charudatta's son, may have a golden-cart he wished for. The toy thus evinces the fidelity and sentiments of the heroine but becomes the source of unexpected trouble for the hero; it was these ornaments that served as a direct proof of Charudatta's guilt viz. the alleged murder of Vasantasena.

प्रकरणं a species of Rupaka or drama. It is defined as:—
भवेत्प्रकरणे वृत्तं लौकिकं कविकल्पितम् । शृङ्गारोऽङ्गी नायकस्तु विप्रोऽमात्योऽथवा
वणिक् । सापायधर्मकामार्थपरो धीरप्रदान्तकः । नायिका कुलजा क्वापि वक्ष्या क्वापि
द्वयंकचित् । तेन भेदास्त्रयस्तस्य तत्र भेदस्तृतीयकः । कितवद्युतकारादिविटचेटसंकुलः ॥'
 S. D. (a species of drama with invented or fictitious plot e. g. our present play, मालतीमाधव, पुष्पभूषित &c. drawn from real life and full of shringar, the permanent sentiment. The hero may be a Brahman, or minister, or a merchant, and should be noble, brave and of a serene disposition and devoted to the acquirement of धर्म, अर्थ and काम, the objects of worldly existence; the heroine may be a girl of high family or a courtesan or in some places both. It is therefore of three kinds of heroes and heroines.). The main plot of the play is of the poet's creation (or it may be an enlarged and improved edition of the original drama चारुदत्त of Bhasa which contains only four acts) and the under-plot of the Revolution which has an historical foundation is an addition to the play; the addition, however, is of an essential nature (See Introduction).

व्यवसिता:—We are prepared or have undertaken.

सुविग्रहः—विग्रह means 'a body' 'गार्त्रं वपुः शरीरं वर्ष्म विग्रहः' of a stately person. द्विजमुख्यतमः—क्षत्रियश्रेष्ठः 'विप्रक्षत्रियविद्वद्भूषा वर्णा- स्त्वाद्या द्विजाः स्मृताः' 'त्रयो वर्णा द्विजातयः'—द्विज here refers to a क्षत्रिय द्विर्जायते इति द्विजः 'जन्मना ब्राह्मणो ज्ञेयः संस्कारैर्द्विज उच्यते hence the word is applicable to a ब्राह्मण, क्षत्रिय, and वैश्य alike. मुख्यतमशब्देन महाकुली- नत्वं व्यज्यते. अगाधसत्त्वः—of unfathomable virtue or courage. Metre औपच्छन्दसिकः—'पर्यन्ते यौ तथैव शेषमौपच्छन्दसिकं सुधीभिस्तम्.'

गणितं Mathematical sciences: ('mathematics and astrology') वैशिकी (कलां)—वेशभवां or वेद्यास्थितां—' नेपथ्ये गृहमात्रे च वेशो वेद्यागृहेऽपिच ' the art to be found in the house of a courtesan or in a courtesan; fine arts. Formerly courtesans were the repositories of fine-arts. See दशकुमारचरित II, where among the arts studied are mentioned नृत्य, गीत, वाद्य, नाट्य, चित्र, आस्वाद्य, गन्धकला, पुष्पकला, and द्यूत. हस्तिशिक्षा गजानांविनयनं—the training of elephants. Wilson observes 'it is an accomplishment curiously characteristic of national manners. The proficiency of the Indians in this art early attracted the attention of Alexander's successors'. W. शात्वा governs the acc. in the first line. शर्व the god Siva 'ईश्वरः शर्व ईशानः शंकरश्चन्द्रशेखरः.' तिमिरं refers to a kind of eyedisease which causes blindness: here it means 'blindness of ignorance'—eyes of knowledge. Siva is propitiated for an attainment of knowledge. Construe शर्वप्रसादात् व्यपगततिमिरे चक्षुषी उपलभ्य (पुनः प्रतिपद्य) शूद्रकोऽग्निं प्रविष्टः 'The Nirnaya Sindhu and other treatises on Hindu law, enumerate self-immolation among acts prohibited in the kali age (कलिवर्ज). These works are comparatively modern; hence Wilson concludes that the play must have been written before these acts were codified into law. In रामायण, शरभंग the sage, only delays his cremation until he has seen Rama; after which 'having prepared the fire and offered oblations with the customary prayers, the pious and perfect sage entered the flames (Aranya Kanda). Wilson observes, 'The commentator is rather at a loss to explain how the author of the play announces his own death, and is disposed to ascribe it to his prophetic foresight acquired by astrological computation. There can be little doubt, however, that such part of these poems as relates to the personal history of the author is usually the work of another hand.' The metre is स्रग्धरा.

प्रमादशून्यः—सदैव कर्तव्येष्ववहितः. ककुदं the hump of an ox—प्रधानः 'प्राधान्ये राजलिङ्गे च वृषाङ्गे ककुदोऽस्त्रियाम्'—Foremost. पर०—fond of fighting mighty (पर) elephants with his arms in a pugilistic contest. 'परः भेष्टारिदूरान्योत्तरे क्लीबं तु केवले,' 'नागाधिकप्राण इति भावः. The metre is औपच्छन्दसिकम्.

द्विजसार्थवाहः—द्विजः ब्राह्मणः स एव सार्थवाहः. वणिक्—जात्या ब्राह्मणः सार्थवाहो वृत्त्या.—a Brahmin and caravan merchant Construe अस्यां कृतौ (मृच्छकटिकाख्ये प्रबन्धे) with चकार सर्वे किल शूद्रको नृपः. The metre is she is named Vasantasena. इदं this play सत्सुरतोत्सवाश्रयं—तयोः of him now going to address his wife ‘ स्त्रियु नाप्राकृतं वदेत् ’. कार्यतश्चोत्तमादीनां कार्यो भाषाव्यतिक्रमः. The सूत्रधार assumes now the role of an ordinary citizen of उज्जयिनी and therefore he speaks in प्राकृत like an inferior character. प्रयोजन &c—सुखप्रयोगयोग्यत्वात् as it is easy for use. ‘ ऐश्वर्येण

विशेषकं &c Malvika III. 5. निधानं treasure. जविलोकः the worldly phenomena, every thing.

इह सर्वं नवं संविधानकं वर्तते &c thus by repeating the word संविधानकं the poet seems to hint at the clever arrangement of his plot. वर्णकं—any coloured substance for painting such as saffron, tumeric &c. cf बहति जलमियं पिनष्टि गन्धान् &c Mudra I.

रसायनं-रसानामयनं स्थानं यथाहंरसयोजनासंस्कृतं—delicious आपणः a market, shop. [एवं देवा स्वामाश्वासयन्तु is said and preferably so by सूत्रधार in Bhasa's चारुदत्तम्.] अभावं &c. स्वरूपनाशं प्राप्स्यसि.

वरडण्डलम्बुक —Apte writes ' it is a word of doubtful meaning ; it seems to mean (1) an overhanging or projecting wall which if raised high is sure to topple down, so in the case of Sutradhara whose expectations were raised very high only to be cruelly disappointed. ', it may also mean (2) a heavy stone (लम्बुक) attached to a long beam (वरण्ड) at the other end of which is hung a bucket which when dipped into water is raised up by the weight of the stone. In Bhasa's Charudatta we read 'अहं चण्डप्रवातलण्डित इव वरण्डः (a mound of earth) पर्वतादूरमारोप्य पातितोऽस्मि' 1. This quotation has helped us to fix the meaning of this word viz " a bundle of grass which may be blown by a strong wind & then cast down ! तत्किं पुनरिदं नवमिव संविधानकं &c. The poet evidently refers to the novel plot of his own play. The explanatory sentence covertly refers to the main incidents of the denouement eg. वर्णकं पिनष्टि may refer to Sakara's attempt to crush चारुदत्त, सुमनसो गुम्फति to the victim's garland thrown round चारुदत्त's neck & the word पञ्च may hint at the five happy events achieved viz. (1) the reestablishment of the pure conduct of चारुदत्त (2) the free pardon granted to शकार—an example of the supreme generosity of चा. (3) Aryaka's elevation to the throne (4) the happy union of चा. & वसन्तसेना & (5) the acquisition of Sarvilaka's friendship.

poverty-stricken state, अस्मादृश...उपनिमान्त्रितेन कार्यं—A Brahman, is required to be invited; we must invite a Brahman, such as would suit poor people like us.

अशितुं &c. it is a polite way of inviting to dinner. Will you kindly lead the dinner at our house? ' व्यापृतः Engaged संपन्न ready.

निःसपत्नं—विपक्षविरहादेकभोज्यं (भोजनं)—Without a rival, Some would take णीसवत्तं as नीसपात्रं meaning ' पितृनुद्दिश्यदत्तं घृतादिसहिततण्डुल-पूर्णपात्रम् ' दक्षिणापि—सम्भाविता दक्षिणा.

आमुख or प्रस्तावना Prologue—is defined as नटी विदूषको वापि पारी-पार्श्वक एव वा । सूत्रधारेण सहिताः संलापं यत्र कुर्वते चित्रैर्वाक्यैः स्वकार्योत्थैः प्रस्तुता-क्षेपिभिर्मिथः । आमुखं तत्तु विज्ञेयं नाम्ना प्रस्तावनापि सा.' The function of a Prologue is to introduce to the audience the play proper and especially a chief character in the play. This is done by the सूत्रधार by naming the character to be introduced as in the शाकुन्तल when the सूत्रधार says ' तवास्मि गीतरागेण &c. and thus introduces दुष्यन्त or by uttering something which is supposed to be overheard by the character to be introduced as in मुद्राराक्षस or by transforming himself into a contemporary of the dramtis personal as in the उत्तररामचरित or in our present play.

प्रावारहस्तः—प्रावारः a mantle, an upper garment ' द्वौ प्रावारेत्तरासंगौ समौ बृहतिका तथा, संव्यानमुत्तरीयं च.' Wilson observes " The scene is supposed to represent a street on one side, and on the other the first Court of Charudatta's house; the outside of the house is also seen in the part next the street."

परस्य चारुदत्तादन्यस्य. हा अवस्थे तूल्यसि—O fortune, thou dost reduce a man to a wretched state (तुल् to put to test; तुल् to ascertain the weight of) उद्धार-ढेंकर in Marathi v. l. उद्धार-उद्दारेण= घृतसेकेन. आशितः stuffed चतुःशालकं a quadrangle enclosed by four buildings. मल्लकः cup. v. l. गल्लकं means the same. चित्रकार a painter अपनयामि—परित्यजामि has for its object मल्लकान्. नगर...वृषभ इव—Wilson remarks. "The Hindus are accustomed at marriages and other ceremonials to let loose a bull, who thenceforward rambles about at will without an owner. No person would presume to appropriate a stray animal of this kind, and many think a merit to feed him.'

रोमन्यायमानः Ruminating or chewing the cud. जीर्णवृद्ध is the friend of the Sutradhara too. गृहदेवता a tutelary deity. Wilson remarks, "In former times the household deities were regarded as the unseen spirits of ill, the ghosts and goblins who hovered about every spot, and claimed some particular sites as their own. Offerings were made to them in the open air, by scattering a little rice with a short formula at the close of all ceremonies to keep them in good humour". सिद्धिकृत &c. These are the evening prayers and oblations.

सर्वकालमित्रं a friend in all seasons, a true friend equally in prosperity or adversity.

Vasantasena's character, although she is born a courtesan बलात्कारः Brutal violence. She thus refuses the observation of Vita. She says that unlike a कुलवधू ' कुलवधूनां हि स्वधर्मनियतानां नास्ति गुणग्राहणा- वसरः,'—she can choose for herself a man of virtue and in the case of the tank &c., which have no life, this remark does not hold good, for these being अचेतन there is no scope for desire or choice &c., कामदेवायतनीयानात्प्रभृति गर्भदासी—जन्मनः प्रभृति 'चेटी slave by birth, a term of abuse and reproach. It is rather curious to read this information from Sakara, when even her own maid Madanika did not know the secret (her love for Charudatta) of Vasantasena (see page 33). This shows that he was not a blockhead; he had some touches of shrewdness in him as will be seen hereafter; he might have observed it, that being the subject ever present in his mind.

It is possible to act this scene on the stage as if playing at the blind-man's buff, but how is it that Radanika does not hear the voices of Sakara and his companions ? It seems quite improbable that she should not hear them and be caught hold of. परामृष्टा touched, seized. चाणाक्येनेव द्रौपदी—another instance of हतोपमा—Chanakya was a celebrated statesman and writer on politics; it was he who overthrew the Nandas and installed Chandragupta whose minister he then became. Chandragupta ruled in the 4th century B C.; it is needless to add, he could not possibly be connected with द्रौपदी who was dragged by her hair and brought in the presence of दुर्योधन by Dushyasana, when the Pandavas lost everything in the द्यूत and Draupadi became the slave of Duryodhana. विक्रान्तः—पराक्रमशाली—Valiant, श्वेतकेतुः a sage, the son of उद्दालक, and the uncle of दुर्वासस्. He put a stop to the practice of married women consorting with other men especially with Brahmans and introduced the rule by which a wife is forbidden to have intercourse with another men unless specially appointed by her husband to raise up seed to him. Thus पाण्डवः श्वेतकेतुः is a characteristic mistake of Sakara : or श्वेतकेतुः may mean अर्जुनः who was शूर and विक्रान्त (श्वेतः केतुः वाहनरूपं his horses यस्य) and then Sakara is unconsciously right. We do not grudge him a single occasion like this. राधायाः पुत्रः not रावणः but कर्णः who when cast off in a river (by Kunti, because he was born of her from the sun, whom she in her maiden innocence invoked by the mantra that was given her by Durvasas—out of fear of her elders because she was yet a virgin), was picked up by Adhiratha, the charioteer of धृतराष्ट्र, who gave the child over to his wife राधा to bring him up. Hence he is called राधेय, सूतपुत्र. इन्द्रदत्तः a character in बृहत्कथा. V.L. इन्द्रपुत्रः i.e. जयन्त born of Sachi and Indra; or वालि the brother of Sugriva कुंत्यां रामेन जातः अश्वत्थामा is the grandest stroke of stupid ignorance कुन्ति the mother of the Pandavas was not a contemporary of राम, अश्वत्थामा was the son of द्रोण (अश्वत्थेव स्थाम बलमस्य) after the death of his father, he was for a time the general of the Kaurava army, At night he massacred the sons of the Pandavas, when they were asleep and when the Pandavas were absent. ACT II.

[This Act is entitled ‘ The Shampooer who gambled ’. The Act opens in Vasantasena's house. She confesses to her maid Madanika, her love for Charudatta. Then a Shampooer appears in the street, pursued by the gambling-master and a gambler, who demand of him ten gold-pieces which he has lost in the gambling-house. At this point Darduraka enters, and engages the gaming master and the gambler in an angry discussion, during which the Shampooer escapes into Vasantasena's house. When she learns that he had once served Charudatta, she pays his debt: the grateful shampooer resolves to turn a monk. As he leaves the house, he is attacked by a runaway elephant, and is saved by Karnapuraka, a servant of Vasantsena—R.]

This Act helps to a certain extent the main theme viz. the love of Vasantasena and Charudatta. The Shampooer's praises of Charudatta, and the gift of the प्रावारक by Charudatta to Karnapura in appreciation of his daring feat, confirms her impression about Charudatta's nobility of mind and she comes to love him all the more. We have a scene from low life in Ujjain of that time—the gambler's ways, his tricks, his rules, and his fate, the street brawls, all delineated with unerring skill. We also learn from दर्दुरक, an Ujjain rake of a plot against the reigning king.

कामः खलु &c. The two sentences can be thus explained (1) कामः खलु नामैष भगवान् अनुगृहीतः you have indeed obliged or favoured Cupid who is तरुणजनस्य महोत्सवः who is the great festivity (occasion of joy) of youths. Cf Wilson ' Love is mighty god, who holds his holidays in youthful breasts '. (2) कामः खलु नाम एषः i. e. ' तस्य वशे कथं न भवितव्यम् ' this is due to Cupid. ' मदनस्य परहृदयवशीकरणसामर्थ्यं सहजमिति च नामसाम्याद्भ्रम्यते ' तरुणजनस्य महोत्सवः joy or त्वदुपलभोत्साहः their enthusiastic efforts to win your love is अनुगृहीतः मन्मथेन वर्धितः i. e. Cupid has now added to the joys or enhanced the zest (to win you) of youths. Cupid is favoured because fate is trying for your union with a fitting youth since you seem disposed to look for a suitable lover. अकामायामपि त्वयि बद्धकामा युवानः, किं पुनः सकामायामिति '—hence मन्मथेन वर्धितः. Jivananda reads कः खलु नाम अद्य अत्रभवत्या अनुगृहीतः महोत्सवे V. 1. (मधूत्सवे वसन्तोत्सवे) तरुणजनः ? What youth was favoured by you to-day at the great festival ? This variant removes all difficulty. रन्तुं &c. कामोपभोगरसिका अहं न धनार्थिनी. ' I wish to enjoy the pleasures of love and not to serve the pleasures or whims of the oppulent youths for their money. ' वेद्याधर्मः द्रव्यप्रधानस्तेवैव अहं तु रन्तुमिच्छामि कुलकन्यकेव, न तु धनिनं कञ्चिदारादुमिति. ' This and the two lines Jivananda considers as spurious (प्रक्षिप्त) since no रमणी would thus express her mind as in रन्तुं &c. Vasantasena takes the word ' सेव्यते ' in its literal sense and remarks that service or obedience and not real love that kings are after; and it is therefore that she has nothing to do with them. विभवः wealth, affluence. उदासीना इव like one who is quite a stranger to the affair ' अजानतीव ' or like one who is indifferent to my concerns. किं स एव येन &c., this refers to the incidents of the first Act which Vasantsena must have naturally spoken to her maid in course of conversation. श्रेष्ठिन्-श्रेष्ठं धनादिकमस्यास्ति—the head or president of a mercantile or other guild. चत्वरं—a place where many roads meet ' चत्वरं स्यात् पथां श्लेषः. ' श्रेष्ठिचत्वरे वणिग्वीथ्यां in the merchant's quarter or street. अवचनीया &c., for generally the courtezans are denounced as being after wealth and wanting in real love. ' अर्थलोभिनी इयं न अनुरागिणी इति अपवादरहिता. ' एवं तावत्. Well, I have guessed it rightly but it does not stand to reason; so let me say thus in order to test her. सहकारः a mango tree—meaning indirectly (by अप्रस्तुतप्रशंसा) Is a man served (by a गणिका) when he is destitute of all his wealth ? Even bees (विवेकरहिताः) do not swarm to a mango-tree when its blossoms have fallen, much less will a discerning woman like you come to love a youth who has lost all his wealth. अत एव तत्र मधुकर्षः उच्यन्ते—Vasantsena retorts that it is therefore that they are called मधुकर्कः honey-makers or gatherers परार्थे मधु कुर्वन्ति न तु आत्मना आस्वादयन्ति (and not those who themselves enjoy honey); she would prefer to be none of the courtezans who are like these मधुकर्कः, since they cultivate their beauty of form and make it an instrument of others' pleasure without themselves enjoying the real pleasure of love and beauty: or she means to say that she would not be fickle like the bees that leave their mango tree when it is destitute of blossoms. Jivananda explains the word as मत्ताः (मधु सेवन्ते) and hence incapable of appreciation and gratitude: she would therefore be none of these: She would remain constant in her love for her lover in any condition of life whom she would choose after fully appreciating his merits. मनीषितः—काक्षितः if you love him. न अभिसार्यते—Why don't you go to meet him? Perhaps owing to his poverty, he may not like to approach you, but if you go to him, surely you will win him over (according to श्रिया दुरापः कथमीप्सितो (जनः) भवेत्). प्रत्युपकारदुर्बलता owing to his inability to make return for my love by presents of money or gold a self-respected man as he is, he will be inaccessible a second time (दक्षिणोऽपि दुर्गततया भूषणाम्बरादिभिः प्रीणयितुमक्षमः मानी पुनर्न आत्मानं दर्शयेदिति). मा तावत्—after saying प्रत्युपकारदुर्बलतया she suddenly checks herself as she does not like to make mention of the hard condition of चारुदत्त 'No, I don't mean that—for I don't expect anything from him in return for my love'. It is on this account viz., that he might not be inaccessible to her and that she should have an occasion to go to him that she deposited her ornaments with him. मदनिका shrewd as she was, rightly guessed it and asked किमतः एव &c.

Page 34—The incidents that follow, that of the संवाहक and of कर्णपूरक serve to confirm the high opinion that Vasantsena has formed of the virtues of चारुदत्त and her admiration for him ripens into ardent love for him (See Introduction). ' अथ चारुदत्तसम्बन्धकया—मात्रेऽपि भूषणप्रदानाद्यनुग्रहेण वसन्तसेनायाश्चारुदत्तानुरागं काक्षलुढं दर्शयितुं द्यूतक-यदिष्टतान्तमपक्षिपति. '

[माधुर is the keeper of a gambling house. द्यूतकर and संवाहक are two gamblers. The latter lost ten Suvarnas, and ran off without paying them. माधुर and द्यूतकर pursue him. संवाहक is confused and bewildered and is represented as entering hastily tossing the curtain. संवाहक speaks the मागधी marked by abundance of श (तालव्यशकारप्राया), and माथुर and द्यूतकर speak the दक्का dialect, characterised by the predominance of व (वकारबहुल).]

अरे भट्टारक may refer either to the people in the streets or to the द्यूतकर (the winning gambler as against संवाहकद्यूतकर who lost ten Suvarnas in the gambling) whom the Sabhika calls upon to catch the संवाहक. सुवर्ण—a gold coin equal to sixteen mashas or about 175 grains Troy; also a weight equal to one Karsha of gold. रुद्धः—दश-सुवर्णार्थं (तादर्थ्यं षष्ठी चतुर्थीवा, प्राकृते षष्ठीचतुर्थ्योरविशेषात्)—रुहीतः arrested for (not paying) ten Suvarnas that was proposed as the stake. V. I लब्ध means the same 'held in custody'. अपटीक्षेपेण—without the curtain being lifted up i. e. tossing aside the curtain. अपटी screen—क्षेपेण throwing aside. It is in accordance with the rule पटीक्षेपो न कर्तव्यः आर्ताराजप्रवेशने '—The curtain should not open on an agitated person (आर्तः) and a king. 'हीमाणहे इति 'खेदे विस्मये वा'.

Jivananda reads नवबन्धनमुक्त इव गर्दभो हा ! ताडितोऽस्मि—'I am beaten or run after by the Sabhika, like an ass let loose from new tether' and explains शक्त्या as 'शक्तिरूपेण दण्डेन' मारितोऽस्मि. अंगराज—कर्ण whom Duryodhana had installed on the sovereignty of the Angas. He had received the Sakti from इन्द्र whom he had given his gold armour and earrings when the latter came to beg these of him so that he (Karna) might be easily killed by Arjuna. (Indra's son). Karna had reserved the infallible weapon for his foe, Arjuna, but when Ghatotkacha (the son of Bhima, by a female demon Hidimba) proved very deadly to the Kaurava hosts, Duryodhana pressed Karna to discharge it (मुक्तया) at घटोत्कच, and Karna obeyed and hurled it at घटोत्कच and slew him. The सभिक is said in the मिताक्षरा to be a person who presides at the house where assemblies are held for the purpose of gambling, and who provides the dice and all other materials. According to the अग्निपुराण "the Sabhika is entitled to five per cent. on money won at play, whenever the sum exceeds one hundred; if it fall short of that amount he is to receive ten per cent. In return for the protection of the king, he shall pay to the royal treasury a fixed proportion of his profits. It is his business to collect from the unsuccessful party whatever sums they may have lost, and transfer them to the winners, and it becomes him to do this civilly, and to adjust the payment on liberal and lenient terms. In all licensed gaming-houses, where the royal dues are regularly paid, the king should enforce the payment of all sums lost but he should not interfere with gaming-houses of a different class. In all disputes, those who have been lookers-on are to be witnesses; and if any foul play or false dice be proved against a gambler, he shall be branded and banished the kingdom. The king shall appoint proper officers to attend at gambling-houses, and secure all dishonest characters; the same rules are applicable to cock-pits and other similar places where animals are set to fight for wagers." The legal sanction, thus given to gambling is very different from the sturdy and moral notions expressed by मनु who directs kings to prohibit such practices in the dominions, and even to punish with death those who engage in them themselves or induce others to do so—Manu Samhita, IX, 221-224 but regulations of either tendency are manifest indications of considerable progress in the vices of civilised society.—W.

The Samvahaka thought he could escape by imposing upon them by means of the verbal payment of his debt that he proposed, and which he wanted to convince them as being paid up wholly by him; for Mathura had willingly foregone the half, while a half was allowed by the gambler. Mathura was however too shrewd for him to be thus trifled with. आत्मानं विक्रीय &c., ' a creditor is authorised by the old Hindu law to enforce payment of an acknowledged debt by blows, the detention of the debtor's person, and compelling him to work in his service; this treatment of the Samvahaka, therefore, however barbarous, is perfectly legal W. आकाशे off the stage. त्रेताहृत &c. The terms त्रेता, पावर, नर्दित, and कट are explained by the commentator as तीया, दूआ, नादि. and पूरा or Three, Two, Ace, and Four. 'If correct, the game alluded to is a kind of Hazard: it is played upon a table or cloth with four compartments, called severally नादी, दूआ, तीया, and चौक or पूरा, and by any number of players. Each stakes upon one or other of the compartments. whatever sum the caster will set him in. The caster has Sixteen cowries, which he shakes in his hands and throws on the ground: those that fall with the valve uppermost are counted, and according as they correspond to either of the divisions, that division sweeps the table,

The mode of counting them refers to the favourite mode of telling off articles in India by four; and the numbers of one, two &c. are not only those numbers simply, but the same in excess above four and its multiples. Thus नदी or Ace is counted by one, five, nine, or thirteen cowries; दुआ or Deuce by two, six, ten, and fourteen; तीया or Tray by three, seven, eleven, and fifteen and पूरा by four, eight, twelve, and sixteen.'  कलहायिताः from कलहाय् (denominative from कलह) dispute, quarrel.
 भूतानि सुवर्णानि—भूतानि can be either explained as (1) गतानि have become things of the past i. e., are now beyond the hope of being recovered, since he entered the house of another for protection and it would be difficult to secure him from there; Or better (2) सञ्जातानि i. e., are now sure—we shall now surely recover our money, for Vasantasena being of a kind disposition, will take pity on the Samvahaka and will relieve him once for all by paying his debt. उपरोधेन Blocking his passage ' निर्गमप्रतिबन्धेन ' पाटलिपुत्रं the modern Patana. गृहपतिः—ग्रामाध्यक्षः a village headman. वृत्तिः the means of livelihood (the same as आजीविका).

Pages 38-40 अतिनिर्विण्णं adv. अत्यन्ताविरक्तं. यथा भवति तथा most disconsolately. आहिण्डक for आहिण्ड् to roam about—traveller. किं प्रलपितेन because his merits cannot be adequately described. दक्षिणतया परकीयं आत्मानं अवगच्छति—he regards his own person even as belonging to others ' शरीरं वित्तादिकं वा परार्थमेव गणयति ' V. L. फलकल्लवं—फलकृते दक्षिणतया ' फलाय आत्मानं अवगच्छति—' महाशयसामर्थ्यफलीभूतमेव आत्मानं सफलं जानाति. ' मनोरथान्तरः—अभिलाष-विशेषः the centre or object of desire viz. Charudatta. अनुक्रोशः compassion. उपरतः exhausted, ended विभवः wealth यस्य—reduced to poverty. ' नष्टधनः ' दुर्लभः &c., for generally we find that the meritorious are not possessed of wealth, while those who are wealthy are destitute of merits. अपेक्षेयु &c., the figure is अप्रस्तुतप्रशंसा—meaning ' persons who are never disposed to be charitable, retain their fund of wealth ' because it confers benefits upon none. भूतलमृगाङ्कः—who is the moon (i. e. as delighting as) on the surface of the earth.

तालवृन्त a fan; this shows Vasantasena's extreme regard for Charudatta. कृतः स धनिकः—'the phrase is intentionally ambiguous. On the one hand it means: 'Where is your creditor (i. e., मायुर) ?' On the other hand it means, "How can he (चारुदत्त) be a rich man?" The Shampooer is shrewd enough too see that it is the hidden meaning which really interests Vasantasena, and answers accordingly. सत्कारधनः &c. परेषां आदरः एव धनं यस्य चलाचलं fickle transient. The meaning of the second line सः पूजयितुं &c. depends upon the presence or absence of न (यः पूजयितुं अपि जानाति स पूजाविशेषं अपि जानाति realises the significance of honour; यः पूजयितुमपि न जानाति स पूजाविशेषमपि न जानाति i. e. by making the last part of the second line a rhetorical question 'स पूजाविशेषमपि जानाति किम्')—the last part can also mean 'receives or does not receive signal marks of honour' जानाति—लभते. अतो भवती सत्कार्या मम. Metre मात्रासमकम्. सवृत्तिः— together with means of subsistence i. e. I was engaged by him as a servant in his house. चारित्र्यं his sterling character अवशेषं what remains with him alone—यस्य i. e. poor अनुसन्धत्तः—are seeking for one. वासपादपविसंछुलतया &c.—Birds flutter about if the roosting tree (the tree in which they have built their nests) is shaken violently or broken, meaning thereby 'servants helplessly wander about in search of employment when their master finds himself in precarious circumstances (is reduced to penury). स्वामिनः दशाविपर्ययेण उपजीविनः एवमशरणाः प्रचरन्ति'. Jivananda's explanation of the line is far-fetched 'यदा पक्षिणः अपि स्वाश्रयस्य नाशे अदर्शने वा तदन्वेष्टुं यतन्ते, तदा अनयोः समिकथूतकरयोः स्वजीविकाभयिभूतस्य एतस्य नष्टस्य अधमर्णस्य अन्वेषणं युक्तं.' तनुमध्या—'मध्ये क्षामा'—of slender waist रतदद्दुर्वितेन अधरेण—उपलक्षणी तृतीया—marked by the lower lip which being bitten, betrays proudly your indulgence in love sports. दुर्विनीतः—सगर्वः—यथैतौ ऊर्ध्व &c. Cf 'प्रध्यायत इवापश्यन्प्रदीपांस्तत्र काञ्चनान्, धूर्तानिव पराजितान्. Rama. यदीदृशानि &c. for gamblers will never admit that they have no money and usually it is these who are after harlots, since they earn often times money in gambling very easily. धारकः a debtor.

कला &c. The phrase is one of exaggerated courtesy: 'if it may be, let this art remain in the hands of a servant of yours i. e. take me into your service.' हस्तगता—made familiar with—शिक्षिता. 'अहं भवद्गृहे कियत्कालं स्थित्वा भवत्याः सेविकाजनान् एतां अंगमर्दनविद्यां शिक्षयित्वा स्वस्थानं गमिष्यामि इति भावः' Jv. शाक्यभ्रमणकः—a Buddhist (शाक्यः the name of the Buddha or his religion) mendicant, while भ्रमणक is a term for a Jaina mendicant. कथं प्रत्युपकरिष्ये How should I make a return for her obligations ? The poet has taken care, as will be seen, to fulfil his wish in the eighth act. स्मर्तव्यानि &c. let this account of mine be a sign of recognition if there be a time when I should be of any use to you. अलं साहसेन because the condition of a mendicant was a very hard one in those days. याद्विहस्तं सर्वस्य जनस्य यद् i. e. दशान्तरं my state सर्वैः जनैः विहस्तं व्याकुलीकरणम् or अवमाननम् in which I am subjected to insult and fear from all (of being persecuted) तद् द्यूतेन कृतम्. विहस्तं a condition of helplessness 'विहस्तव्याकुलौ समौ.' It can also be explained as यद्—दशान्तरं referring to his just taking the vow of a Buddha mendicant जनस्य सर्वस्य विहस्तं in which no man may lay his hands on me (as in my previous state of a (gambler), because now I am an avowed mendicant wandering about without a pie in my hand 'वयं रिक्तहस्ताः परिभ्रमामः'—besides it would be a sacrilege to attack a Buddha mendicant. Stenzler takes बीभत्सं evidently referring to his miserable condition of being a damned gambler. तद् द्यूतेन कृतं i. e., is due to my gambling. विहस्तं—'हस्तशब्देन हस्तशस्त्रः विगतहस्तशस्त्रं भवति निर्भयमित्यर्थः' प्रकटशीर्षं—not hanging my head down as before (for fear of being seen by a creditor), Cf., 'looks the whole world in the face,' The Village Blacksmith. गन्धगजः a species of elephants giving out a strong odour. व्यवसित determined.—दुर्मनुष्यः Ill-mannered fellow. वञ्चितासि you have been deprived of a grand opportunity 'you have lost a sight.' 'विलोचनं दक्षिणमञ्जनेन संभाव्य तद्वञ्चितावाम नेत्रा' Ragh. VII. 1. आलानं—गजबन्धनं—the elephant's tying-post. महामात्रः the head keeper of an elephant उद्घुष्टं proclaimed. वृक्षान् प्रासादान् (terraces)—वृक्षप्रासादं (समाहार); अपनवत राजमार्गात्. विचलित &c. construe with स्त्रीणां भयसंभ्रमात् (understood) it can also be taken to refer to the infuriated elephant

रत्नांकुरजालप्रतिबद्धाः (वलयाः) studded with a network (जालं) of spars (अंकुराः) of jewels. फुल्ल &c. The city is compared, on account of the ornaments of jewels scattered about, to a lake full of blooming lotuses. (The principal word in the Simile viz., ' a lake ' is to be understood). परिव्राजकः—It requires a great strain upon the reader's imagination to take this परिव्राजक to be the Samvahaka—and it is he as is seen from the word द्यूतलेखकं further—as very little time as allowed for the Samvahaka to suddenly transform himself into a Buddha mendicant. दण्ड a staff. कुण्डिका a bowl. शीकरैः with sprays of water from his trunk. प्रमादः a calamity विसंष्टुल—lying unevenly, dangling about. वामचरणेन—वामचलनेन—by running in a zigzag way (वक्रगत्या—in order to avoid being attacked by the elephant); the word cannot be satisfactorily taken with गृहीत्वा as to be construed as वामचरणेन गृहीत्वा स दुष्टहस्ती आकारितः (called out by name, brought to a halt—स्पर्धया आहूतः) meaning, ' seizing by its left feet,' for गृहीत्वा has for its object लोहदण्डं उद्घुष्य—having thundered aloud or shouted (in order to cheer up the mendicant) ' माभैषीः इतिपुनः पुनराश्रास्य. ' Stenzler takes it as उद्घुष्य—meaning ' Stumbling over a gambler's score (द्यूतलेखकं) with my left foot' and Ryder remarks ' the suddenly metamorphosed shampooer has forgotten to rid himself of his gambler's paraphernalia which he drops when attacked by the elephant.' But this meaning does not seem to be satisfactory. One commentator explains it as ' वामपादेन लोहदण्डं गृहीत्वा, हस्तेन ग्रहणे हि नमन्तं हस्ती गृहीयात् विलम्बश्च स्यादिति पादेन ग्रहणम्. ' विन्ध्याशैलशिखरस्येव आभा beauty यस्य तं. विषमभराक्रान्ता—loaded unevenly—एकत्रातिरिक्तेन भरेण संभृता. The custom of marking garments with the owner's name is referred to again in the eighth act, इति वाचयित्वा ससृष्टं गृहीत्वा प्रावृणोति—She thus evinces her extreme love for Charudatta. ACT III.

Pages 45-46, पिशुनो दुर्जनः खलः wicked or malignant man. परिणामदारुणः—ultimately cruel; hard to deal with in the end दुष्करः—दुःसाध्यः दुःसेव्यः—hard to please. The first line has a reference to Charudatta and the next to Sakara. Metre वैतालीयः In some books this verse reads as follows:—सुजनः खलु कुभृत्यपालकः धनहीनोऽप्रभुरपि शोभते । पिशुनः पुनर्द्रव्यगर्वितो न च लक्ष्मीविभवावलम्बितः ’.

The similitude here consists in the resemblance of the soft low tone to the soft low muttering of the Mantras. शुष्क suggests that the muttering takes a very long time during which the flowers wither. V. I. सूक्ष्मसुमनोदामवेष्टितः &c., suggests that काकलीगीतं is as ill-suited to a male singer as a fine flower garland round the neck of a वृद्धपुरोहित.

raised (curved). ' विषाणस्यात् पशुशृगेभदन्तयोः '—elephant's tusk. With reference to this verse, see Introduction—Time—Analysis.

Pages 47-48 पादौ धावितुं—to wash or cleanse the feet. This custom of washing the feet upon a person's return home is in vogue even now. ' It was equally the practice of the Greeks ;

' Next my girl, sprightly nymph, brings her napkin and lymph.

Feet and ankles are quick in ablution ' (Quoted by Wilson).

अलं सुमजनं &c. This remark shows Charudatta's nobility of mind and tender regard for his servants. धावयति sets to wash डुण्डुभः a poisonless serpent. Vidushaka being void of all the qualifications for a ब्राह्मण, rightly compares himself to a डुण्डुभः a serpent merely in name. सुवर्णभाण्डं—the golden casket deposited by Vasantasena. निद्राचौरं—that robs me of my sleep (since he has to guard it very carefully). प्रकाशनारी a public woman. Metre उपजाति.

मनुष्यसत्त्वं—मानवबलं तिरस्कृत्य. जरा old age too, ललाटदेशात् उपसर्पति, since the first sign of old age is the gray hair on the head. Figure is उपमा. Metre वंशस्थविलम्. परिणाहो विशालता—bulk, circumference. कर्ममार्गेचौर्यक्रियोपायं सन्धि a breach or a passage in order to proceed with my thieving. निर्मुच्यमानः—निर्मोकेन त्यज्यमानः—casting off his slough (if the v. l. जीर्णतनुं is adopted)—with the reading of the text it means, ' escaping. ' He compares himself to a serpent with a worn out body and escaping from out of an obstacle, getting well scratched thereby: since he too experiences the state (has his back or sides scratched) while passing through the breach. Metre. वसन्ततिलक. नृपतेः पुरुषाः नगररक्षकास्तेभ्यः शंकितः प्रचारः गमनं यस्य—Who am walking about in apprehension of the city guards. घनपटल०—When taken with रजनी it means ' घनानां पटलतमसा निरुद्धा obscured ताराः stars यस्यां सा; and in the case of जननी it means घनान्यां प्रवृद्धान्यां पटलतमोभ्यां तिमिरालयेन पटलालयेन च नेत्ररोगाभ्यां निरुद्धा तिरोहिता darkened तारा कनीनिका pupil यस्याः V. l. घनतिमिरनिरुद्धसर्वभावा in which all things (सर्वभावाः) are covered by thick darkness. This epithet is applicable only to-

रजनी. 'पटलं वृन्दं नेत्ररोगश्च तारा नक्षत्रमक्षणः कनीनिका च.' संवृणोति—conceals me from the guards. He compares the night to a kindhearted mother because the night protects and helps him like a fond mother who looks after her son, although he may be wicked and misbehaved. 'जननी च वत्सला दृष्टिरोधानादुपगूहनेनैव केवलं पुत्रप्रीतिमनुभवति or 'यथा जननी नीतिशून्यं अतिदुर्वृत्तमपि सुतं यत्नात् वस्त्रादिना संवृणाति, तथा तमिस्त्रापि तमसाऽजस्रं चौरतनयं संवृणोति' Metre पुष्पिताग्रा. दूषयामि—I shall disfigure; make a hole. वर्धते (इदं चौर्ये)—which thrives when others are in sleep. चौर्ये is विश्वतरेषु those who are confident or free from care or are off their guard वञ्चनया परिभवः अवमानना, न तत् शौर्ये. However, स्वाधिना वचनीयता अपि वरं, बद्धः सेवाङ्गलिः न वरम्. द्रौणिः अश्वत्थामन्, the son of Drona. He took a hint at this and having managed somehow to get an entrance into the Pandava camp, he murdered the sleeping warriors and the children of the Pandavas who were absent from the camp that night. Sharvilaka quotes this instance particularly to extricate himself from the charge of practising thieving. although he was a Brahman : for even a renowned warrior and a great Brahman, such as Asvatthama was, had to take resort to this method.

Pages 49-50 करालः wide, yawning सन्धिः a breach. न दर्शनान्तरगतः—construe with भित्तिनां—which may not be seen on the wall very easily; by others such as the policemen or by the people or दर्शनं शास्त्रं science of thieving दर्शनान्तरगतः found in or in accordance with the directions laid down in the treatises on robbery, न करालः भवेत्—how am I to effect a breach so that it may well suit the scientific directions and may not be contrary (करालः विपरीतः) to these? लोष्टककृशं—कृशीभूतलोष्ट—'Meagre in masonry being corroded by saltpetre or acid water'. कस्मिन् (देशे) स्त्रीजनदर्शनं न भवेत् अत एव च अर्थसिद्धिः भवेत्—for his purpose will be frustrated at the sight of a woman : for a thief ought to avoid women's quarters and must not kill a woman, according to the several conventionalities of robbing, हर्म्यं a mansion, 'हर्म्यादि धनिना

वासः '. लीजन &c., perhaps at the sight of a woman, a thief may lose his firmness of purpose, or being light in their sleep women will awake and raise an uproar. दूषिता—weakened. मूषिकोत्करः rubbish thrown by rats उत्करः (उत्+कृ) that which is thrown up, स्कंदपुत्राणां—of the sons (i. e. devotees of) of Skandha, the son of Shiva and the patron deity of robbers—स्कंदकृतशास्त्रोपजीविनाम्. चौरविद्या, the science of thieving, is ascribed to योगाचार्य who was taught the science by god Kartikeya, कनकशक्ति—the wielder of the golden lance i. e. स्कंद. आमेषका—a raw or unbaked brick (इष्टका). पद्मव्याकोपं &c. सप्तविधः सन्धिः seven different shapes in which a breach can be made. पद्म०—विकसितपद्माकरं—one shaped like a fullblown lotus भास्करं—like the sun, विस्तीर्णं—oblong (it is a separate form of breach). The first two lines quote the seven forms of breach according to चौरदर्शन 'इष्टकाभित्तौ संस्कारवशेन पद्मव्याकोशादिसंज्ञाः सप्त सन्धयः'. Supply at the end of the second line 'these can be made by me'. स्वस्तिकं having the shape of a स्वस्तिकं the auspicious mark (cross with ends bent round) शिल्पं—skill in architecture. Metre वैश्वदेवी. विषमासु—विपरीतासु—unsuccessful. Regnaud and Bohtlingk take it to mean 'difficult.' This epithet anticipates and explains the दोषान् in the fourth line (Journal-A. S.) कल्पनासु० सन्धिरचनासु—creations of breach, प्रतिवेशिन् a neighbour, Metre वसन्ततिलक. वरदः a boon-giver. People worship Kartikeya for the recovery of thier stolen goods. It is on this account, therefore that thieves try to propitiate him. ब्रह्मणि साधुः—ब्रह्मण्यः. देवव्रत—may be the name like भास्करन्दिन or it may mean 'whose law is divine'. योगरोचना—a magic ointment समालब्धं-युक्तं, लिप्तं—Besmeared. प्रमाणसूत्रं—measuring line—tape. (For the implements of theft, see Dasha-kumara Charitam II). उपकरणद्रव्यं—useful or serviceable thing. मापयति—देहानुरूपपरिमाणं करोति. संप्रयोगः fastenings. उद्घाटकः a key. यन्त्रेण a bolt, a lock दृढं तस्मिन् कपाटे. कीट such as scorpions. परिवेष्टनं—दण्डप्रदेशे बन्धनं—serves the purpose of a tourniquet. Stenzler adopts V. I. नृपस्य रक्षान् (the king’s guards or watchmen) परिहरामि. The difficulty in this line crops up because of the presence of न. रक्षां न परिहरामि ‘I do not avoid preservation’ means ‘I should like to keep it as it is’—this is exactly the reverse of what the speaker intends to say. Ryder proposes a bold emendation: ‘नयस्य रक्षां परिहरामि and translates ‘I avoid the preservation of justice (नय) i. e. I am willing under the circumstances to thwart the law because of the abundant evil of scandal—scandal is such a dreadful evil that I am justified in departing from the course of conduct which strict justice demands’. अकृपणशौण्डीर्य &c—so as to show the loftiness of spirit (शौण्डीर्य) of a noble-minded person (अकृपण) i. e. proudly and magnanimously—adv. modifying (अभिधातव्यम्). शौचं mourning allusions.

ACT IV.

[Sharvilaka comes to Vasantasena’s house to buy Madanika’s freedom. Vasantasena overhears the facts concerning the theft of her gem-casket from Charudatta’s house, but accepts the casket, and gives Madanika her freedom. As Sharvilaka leaves the house, he hears that his friend Aryaka, who had been imprisoned by the king, has escaped and is being pursued. Sharvilaka departs to help him. Maitreya comes from Charudatta with the pearl-necklace, to repay Vasantasena for the gem-casket. She accepts the necklace also, as giving her an excuse for a visit to Charudatta—R.]

Wilson translates ' when (यतः) your eyes and thoughts are intent but on one object, it is very unnecessary to inquire the cause '. The next sentence contains Vasantasena's answer. With the former explanation Vasantasena's answer refers only to the drawing ; but मदनिका in her remark सखीजनचित्तानुवर्ती &c. gives a different turn to the conversation and as this remark follows Vasantasena's reply सुखीजनादुपहसनीयतां रक्षामि it seems Madanika understands that Vasantasena refers the whole conversation to her love for a poor man. सखीजनचित्त &c. He was grandson of शतानीक, son of जनमेजय, the grandson of अर्जुन. वत्स was named उदयन from being educated on the Eastern or उदय mountain by the sage जमदग्नि When arrived at maturity, he was decoyed into captivity by चण्डसेन the King of Ujjain. He was liberated by means of a clever intrigue by his minister यौगन्धरायण, and in his escape he carried off वासवदत्ता, the daughter of चण्डसेन. The adventures of Vatsa are recorded in the वासवदत्ता of सुबन्धु and in the बृहत्कथा of गुणादय, an extinct work in the पैशाची dialect 'which survives in सोमदेव's translation named कथासरित्सागर cf. प्राप्यावन्तीनुदयनकथाकोविदग्रामवृद्धान्' Megh I. 30, Metre वसन्ततिलक. आहितात्मशंकैः—आहिता स्थापिता आत्मनि शंका भयं यैः—'स्वदोषतो लोकविद्विष्टैः स्वयमेवभीतैः न त्वस्मत्सुहृदाऽपकृतैः—'who have raised imaginary apprehensions of their own. सरभसम् violently; quickly. The intruder was detected by the sun and the moon, who pointing him out to Vishnu, that deity decapitated the demon. hence his immortality and the enmity of the planets. W; बन्धुलः—a bastard (the characteristics of a bastard are given in verse 28)—Vasantasena wants to show मैत्रेय every mark of respect; hence the escort. पुष्पकविमानेन &c.—the पुष्पक car belonged to Kubera; but Ravana took it from him by force of his might that was the result of his penances. He compares himself to Ravana, for the latter was conveyed in the aerial car in company of his ministers and queens and all retinue; मैत्रेय too is being conveyed by a retinue consisting of men and women नरनारी (चेटी and बन्धुल) and fancies Vasantssena's mansion to be like the Pushpaka car itself. V. I. नगरनारीजनेन means 'by a number of courtezans;' some explain it as 'नरयुक्ता नारी नरनारी सोद्वाहिका यस्य पुष्पकमपि सा नरनारी सीतारूपा उद्ग्रहीया यस्येहशम्.' Dr. Ryder sees a pun on पुष्पक and translates. 'I travel with another sort of blossom (पुष्पक—Blossom)—a woman of the town.' From the pompous language of Vidushaka's descriptions it seems that the passages are an intentional travesty or these are interpolated from the pen of another author. Dr. Ryder thinks that अनभिगमनीयो लोकस्य was originally a gloss: for they are merely an explanation of the comparison of Vasantasena's brother with a graveyard Chamṣaka (श्मशान-वीथ्यां जातः चम्पकः) and quotes vi. 20 as an interesting parallel where after his Prakrit speech चन्दनक adds in Sanskrit (not in this text) किं शब्दविचारः स्त्रीपुंनपुंसकव्याख्यानमप्रस्तुतम्. पुष्पप्रावारकः a garment or mantle embroidered with flowers. v. l. फुल्लप्रावारक चित्रकणः oily, greasy कवट् dirty—old witch (डाकिणी &c.) किमेनां प्रवेश्य I believe she was first brought in or entered like a big idol of महादेव (in a temple with a narrow door) and then the entrance (door) was built in this house. चातुर्थिकः—quartan ague. [It seems that the whole of the description of the eight courts the answers of the pages and a part of the description of the garden as well as Maitreya's vulgar jokes at the expense of Vasantasena's brother and mother are interpolated. Vasantasena's mother appears to be a respectable lady, and is in a condition to appear personally in the court.]

She also means thus to show respect to the Brahmana companion of चारुदत्त. 'सार्थवाहपुत्रस्य इति वयस्य-ताव्यञ्जनार्थम्'. गुणप्रवालं &c., चारुदत्त is represented by metaphor to be a वृक्ष, for as in the case of the tree, his merits are the outspreading foliage, his modesty are the boughs, his honour (or even 'confidence' of others) is the foot from which the tree derives its strength and his magnanimity (महनीयं महनीयत्वं नैसर्गिकमौन्नत्यं) is the flowers that spread their fragrance far and wide. आश्रयन्ति a question ; do these, yet resort to him even when all his wealth is gone or have they flown off or forsaken him now, like birds that no longer seek a tree destitute of leaves or fruit ? 'साक्षाद्दर्शनाभ्युपायो ह्ययं न दूतेन प्रापणमर्हति इति भावः'. कथं &c. How is it that &c.; she wonders how Charudatta could produce, even in his utter poverty, such an invaluable necklace. Charudatta is represented by metaphor to be a mango tree and the necklace, the drops of honey. विहस्य—मध्यमं हास्यं कृत्वा—She laughed because she knew that Charudatta's message regarding himself was all false;

he had not lost it in gambling but was robbed of it by a thief viz. शर्विलक, and she winked at her friend at the words of Maitreya किं तावन्नगृह्णाति भवतीमां रत्नावलीम् ' which suggest a wish on his part that she should politely refuse to accept it. ' विदूषकस्य न्यासाननयोगाभिलाषं दृष्ट्वैतिभावः '. प्रदोषे आर्ये प्रेक्षितुं &c. Jivanand remarks ' प्रदोषे हि चन्द्रोदयः भवति, तच्च दृष्ट्वा चकोर्यः मत्ता भवन्ति, अहमपि प्रदोषे त्वन्मुखचन्द्रं दृष्ट्वा तथा भविष्यामि इति ध्वन्यते. [Vasantasena comes to know that चारुदत्त has lost the casket of gems; the casket however, reaches the hands of Vasantasena and she bestows Madanika upon शर्विलक. मैत्रेय comes from चारुदत्त to Vasantasena with Dhuta's necklace as a substitute for the lost casket and here the act closes. The act, therefore, is the logical conclusion of the third act. Again, it introduces the next act, since वसन्तसेना has accepted the रत्नमाला and can now safely pay him a visit. It also helps the main action. ' Vasantasena's love for चारुदत्त the central of the play is deepened by the sense of honour he displays.' Here also we have the further development of the underplot. आर्यक is imprisoned by पालक, and शर्विलक has set himself earnestly to release him.]

ACT V. THE STORM

[Charudatta appears in the garden of his house. Here he receives a servant of वसन्तसेना, who announces that Vasantasena is on her way to visit him. Vasantasena then appears in the street with the courtier; the two describe alternately the violence and beauty of the storm which has suddenly arisen. Vasantasena dismisses the courtier, enters the garden, and explains to चारुदत्त how she has again come into possession of the gemcasket; meanwhile, the storm has so increased in violence that she is compelled to spend night at Charudatta's house—R.]

Ramayana, Dr. Ryder remarks, ' the Vidushaka makes use of his third homely prose proverbs in this scene. This little Scene is imitated by Harsha in the Ratnavali, act II, 6. We should have welcomed a च after अन्धकारे वृद्धरंक इव &c. वृद्धरंक may either mean 'an old miser' or 'an old beggar, the miser sighs during a famine, because of general poverty, and a beggar sighs because of fatigue after wandering about for alms without success. रंक also means 'a stork'. श्वासायसे—श्वासं करोषि. इन्द्रमहकामुक &c. इन्द्रमहः a festival in honour of Indra कामुकः—सम्पन्नमिष्टान्नवस्तुपहारलुब्धः—desirous (qualifying काकः understood from काकायसे—काकवत् काकाशब्दं करोषि). Prof. Paranjpe writes, 'The इन्द्रमह festival probably disappeared with the old Indian kingdoms, The बृहत्कथा and the कलिकापुराण describe the शक्रध्वजेत्थापन. A tall tree was felled in the forests and solemnly brought to the city and a pole made out of it. It was called the Indra. On the 12th of भाद्रपद it was again privately removed to a forest. This was meant to propitiate Indra.' A crow is, according to the mythology of the Puranas, the son of Indra viz. Jayanta that came to Rama to test him in the form of a crow. He receives a share in every Sacrifice. Some take इन्द्रमहकामुकः to mean 'a dog' desirous of the Indra festival. The festival may refer to an account in the महाभारत—King Vasu gave up the use of arms and devoted himself to the practices of the most severe austerities: Indra and other gods approached him and propitiated him. Indra gave him a celestial car and a triumphal garland; he also gave him a bamboo pole for protecting the honest and the peaceful. The king planted it on the ground for the purpose of worshipping the giver thereof i. e., Indra. From that time all kings plant a pole for the celebration of Indra's worship. अहं मस्तके. &c. I shall vanquish you i. e., solve your riddle (प्रश्नः)--' प्रतिवचनेन जेष्यामि. ' जानीही तावत्, तेनहि--first guess it, man, then you may do as you like. मुकुलिता भवन्ति--Blossom. सेनावसन्ते—Maitreya puts his answer together सेना वसन्त, and the wit lies in punning and blundering on परिवर्तय transpose or turn around, and, पद foot or an inflected word. The very term might be suspected of etymological affinity to the English "Pun", being पण्ह, the Prakrit form of प्रश्न. ' W. धनिकः a creditor: a mistress is in a way, a lover's creditor; कुलं—a house यदि कुले &c. Rit. Sumhara II. 1. एतैरेव &c., The sense is; the clouds have already sufficiently pained the hearts of love-lorn women and they are yearning for the company of their beloveds: why does then the बक intensify their pangs and exasperate them by adding insult to injury with his cries that proclaim the advent of the rainy season ; The cry of a बक resembles the sound of the word प्रावृट् &c. hence the fancy. Pages 87-88. Stanza 24—Here the world is described as sleeping in a house of rain under a canopy of clouds with its mouth, the quarters, and its eyes, the lotuses closed ; it is also said to have lost all distinction of night and day, and the darkness is being removed at intervals by lightning. The description is not, however, faithful; a canopy cannot be outside a house but is inside it: besides स्फीताम्भोधरधाम &c., 'furnished with...clouds in the sky, the abode of swelling clouds., is tautologous.' क्षपयति चेष्टां-क्षपा night. ण्डं—multitude स्फीतानां अम्भोधराणां धामनि नैकाश्चते जलदास्ते एव छत्रयस्य तत् अपिधानं covering यस्य qualities जगत्. उपकृतं—'असत्पुरुषसेवेव दृष्टिर्विफलतां गता.' त्रिदशपतिशस्त्रस्य शिखिना by the fire (शिखिन्) of the bolt of Indra, the lord of the gods (त्रिदशाः). प्रथमश्रीः-प्रथमा न तु पितृपैतामही श्रीः सम्पद् यस्य—who has obtained wealth for the first time. With पुरुषः वर्धति-धनादिकं ददाति, and तिमिरौघं करोति-पापराशिं आतनोति accumulates sin; or मोहान्धकारं आत्मन उत्पादयति. माहेन्द्रेण धनुषा—The description of a rain-bow in a night scene is inappropriate. विवल्गति-योद्धुं स्फुरति—is preparing to fight, or threatens. रस् to scream, to roar. अशनिः thunder-bolt आघूर्णति reels. अहिभिः सान्द्रमिव धूपायति gets misty (V. I. धूमायति—emits dense smoke) as if it were full of black serpents. The dark clouds irregularly moving in the sky look like serpents. धूमायति—'धूमज्योतिः सलिलमरुतां सन्निपातः क्व मेघः ' Megh I. परामृश—seize, outrage and hence 'you are निर्द्वज '. पूर्वरातिप्रसक्ता—attached to you by love formerly (or in former birth). प्रियकांक्षितायाः—प्रियेण कांक्षितायाः प्रतीक्षितायाः ; or प्रियः कांक्षितो यया तस्याः—who is eagerly expected by her lover, or who am longing for the company of my lover. —यद्वत् &c. The construction is elliptical but easily intelligible '—'as (was thy grief when) thou didst speak falsely &c. Such is my grief also ; O cruel ! Let the cloud be restrained.' Sympathise with me in my torture, for you yourself know it, as in the case of Ahalya, what it is like. You then removed the obstacle in the way of your union with her by lying, so remove also mine by restraining the cloud. 'महर्षेः दुरन्तं कोपं जानताऽपि न सोढः संकल्पितप्रियतमाविश्लेषः स कथं महदुःखमवजानासि इत्यर्थः.' 'Indra having fallen in love with अहल्या, the wife of the sage गौतम, and finding her not to be won to his purpose, deceived her by the Amphictrionic device of assuming her husband's shape'—W. The sage soon coming back discovered the mischief and cursed them both. The absurdity of the myth is removed by taking अहल्या to mean 'night' (अहर्लीयतेऽस्यां) गौतम—the moon, and इन्द्र the sun. हे निरपेक्ष—O thou who art regardless of others' grief. V. l. निरवेक्ष्य—construe it as ममापिदुःखं निरवेक्ष्य सम्यग् ज्ञात्वा (realising) जलदः निवार्यताम्. अयिविद्युत्—Vasantasena addresses in a fault-finding tone the lightning for not assisting her with a steady light on her way : she appeals to the woman hood of the विद्युत् as a woman. the विद्युत् must sympathise with Vasantasena in her difficulty : she says, she cannot blame the cloud so much, for males cannot realise the condition of females. cf. तारापते कुमुदिनीमनुकूलकान्तां पादेव पीडयसि कम्पयसि द्विजातीन्, विद्वेषमाचरसि किं च वियोगिलोके नक्तंचरस्य भवतः करुणा कुतः स्यात्—Sudh. : 'सोत्साहा नववारिभारगुरवो मुञ्चन्तु नादं घनाः वाता वान्तु कदम्बरेणुशबला नृत्यन्तु सर्पद्विषः । मग्नां कान्तवियोगदुःखजलधौ मां वीक्ष्य दीनाननां विद्युत् किं स्फुरसि त्वमप्यकरणे स्त्रीत्वेऽपि तुल्ये सति ॥ आखण्डलः—आखण्डयति पर्वतान्—Indra. कोपेन विना &c. feigned anger is essential to the enjoyment of real love. 'प्रेम्णः कुटिलगामित्वाकोपे यः कारणं विना' and 'न विना विप्रलम्भेन सम्भोगः पुष्टिमश्नुते.'—Metre गीति. नूपरलम्ब कर्दमधरौ (पादौ)—the anklets whereof are soiled by (lit to which is clung (लम्ब) mud (कर्दम) एषा छत्रधारिका भावस्यैव भवतु—let this umbrella-bearer be entirely at your service now ; thus she cleverly suggests that both the वीट and the छत्रधारिणी may now retire.

Pages 89-92. दाक्षिण्यमेव (your extreme generosity) पण्यं price तेन यः सुखनिष्कयः स एव सिद्धिः or तेन सिद्धिः—स्वयं असामान्यं दाक्षिण्यं प्रकटय्य चारुदत्ततो निरतिशयं सम्भोगसुखं अनुभूयताम् अन्यथा अकिंचनतया ततस्ते सुखं नव भविष्यति'—Vita says that she might be very generous and courteous towards Charudatta and then in his company, she will find complete happiness ; or better she should sell the happiness which is at her disposal and receive in return the company of an extremely generous-hearted man. "This is an ideal traffic in love"; and thus in Vita's opinion she can achieve the highest goal of courtesan's love which was till then shamefully abused by receiving a price in money—वेद्यारूपस्य आपणस्य (market). साटोपं सदम्भं or सगर्वं यत् कूटं माया—Superciliousness. Dr. Ryder prefers v. l. दाक्षिण्यपण्यमुखनिष्कयसिद्धिस्तु and translates: 'may you have success in the sale of your face, the price of which is courtesy'. इति निष्क्रान्तः indicates that he retired alone ; the छत्रधारिणी acts as the चेटी who answers Vidushaka's queries in the next scene. युष्माकं द्यूतकरः—thus Vasantasena refers to the explanation offered by Charudatta of how the ornaments were lost. अलंकृतः—This is said ironically. Vidushaka does not like that his friend should thus be branded as a द्यूतकर; or Vidushaka thinks that it was but a welcome compliment to be called a gamester by her for thereby she shows that she never suspects him of having appropriated the casket of gems and believes that it was really lost in gambling. का यूष्माकं &c. She is surprised to hear of a शुष्कवाटिका when the rain was pouring. Vidushaka interprets शुष्क as यत्र न खाद्यते न पीयते. अवसर एव पारयिष्यति—The occasion itself will make you bold to ask him thus. What a difference between Vasantasena and Sita! The latter says in the Uttararamacharita 'भवतु कोपिष्यामि' but admits her own weakness in यदि तं (रामं) प्रेक्ष्यात्मनः प्रभविष्यामि ; Vasantasena is conscious of her winning powers and uses them. Stanza 37 is indeed very prosaic. यौवराज्यस्थः enjoying the dignity of an heir—apparent to the throne (and therefore being sprinkled with holy water); only one of the sons of a king and that is the eldest enjoys this honour ; and hence एकः स्तनः is rightly compared to an heir—apparent. प्रधानवाससी—प्रकृष्टवस्त्रद्वयं—a pair of excellent garments. चन्द्रालोकः the light of the moon. ऋजुकः—simple blunt (for कामिरहस्यं प्रभं न अर्हति अत एव अयं ब्राह्मणः अनागरिकः). मन्त्रितमेव मन्थ्यते—you are simply repeating what we had spoken before you. अवबध्नाति—rivets, fastens. व्याजः stratagem. किन्तु &c., but is it really a truth or is it a joke (विडम्बना) ? '. किं वयं बाह्याः—why don't you admit me into your secrets ? भद्रे न कदाचित् &c- We find several times this instinctive impulse in Charudatta, of giving something as a present to each and every one that brings him a glad news and points to his noble dispositions in the days of his affluence. अनंगुलीयकं &c. It appears that he has but recently been reduced to poverty as it does not seem to have been yet a settled fact with him. अत एव काम्यसे—Thus Vasantasena appreciates the virtues of Charudatta for even in his indigence he has retained his magnanimity and charitable propensities. 'सम्पत्तौ च विपत्तौ च महतामेकरूपता.' It is his benevolent nature and highly elevated mind that excite her love and admiration for him. आदितः एव—'from the start.' प्रतिकारे निग्रहानुग्रहस्य निरर्थकत्वात्—Being incapable of counteraction. कोपप्रसादाः ‘ न हि अस्य कोपेन कस्यचिदर्यहानिः प्रसादेन वाऽर्थलाभः इतिभावः ’ Metre उपजाति. यद्दृष्टपूर्वजनसंगमविस्मृतानां—of those who forget themselves in the company of their beloved seen after a long time (or persons seen before) Charudatta means to say that in his excessive joy at the sight of Vasantasena, he forgot himself and his poverty. स्नानशाटिका—the bath clout, mentioned in the third Act in Sarvilaka’s speech, and which was wrapped round the casket of gems. तूलयितुं—परीक्षितुं—नहि अहं अर्थ—परा इतिभावः—to put me to test ; to betray your lack of confidence in me. (To make light of me i. e. to form a low opinion about me that I would care more for my gold than for your word and confidence).

Pages 93-94. अपसारयन् driving. जलदान्तराणि भित्त्वा—breaking out from or piercing through the clouds. व्यसनं calamity (here being observed by the clouds). Figure—उत्प्रेक्षा. आर्यजन—the virtuous; प्रतिकर्कश very fierce बलदेवपटप्रकाशः—having the lustre of Baladeva’s garments (i. e. blue). Balarama, the elder brother of Krishna, is represented as of fair complexion and as नीलवस्त्रः; he taught both दुर्योधन and भीम the use of the mace and refused to take part in the war between the Pandavas and the Kauravas. निधानं—Hoard, treasure. पिष्टतमालवर्णकं—unguent of Tamala leaves ground to juice. संसक्त—continuous. आलसं and उपवीजितं (as qualifying अम्बरं) suggest the feverish condition of a lover. Cf. ‘ तापात् तत्क्षणवृष्टवन्दनरसौ पाण्डू कपोलैव हन् संसक्तैर्निजकर्णतालपवनैः संवीज्यमानाननः... दुःसहामिव दशांघत्ते गजानां पतिः ’ Naganand I. 20. रक्ता—(1) red, (2) amorous, loving. अम्भोदसमागम-प्रणयिनि—desirous of uniting with the clouds’, Charudatta here indirectly hints Vasantasena to embrace him just as the lightning is doing in the case of the sky. The fig. is समासोक्ति. संस्पर्शरोमाञ्चितजातरागं (गात्रं)—thrilling with joy at her touch and passionate. For the simile of कदम्ब cf. ‘ त्वत्सम्पर्कात्पूलकितमिव प्रौढपुष्पैः कदम्बैः ’ Megh I. 25. Charudatta was exceedingly delighted at the touch of Vasantasena and consequently the hair on his body thrilled with joy and resembled the sprouts of a Kadamba flower. Kadamba is said to put forth buds at the roaring of thunder clouds. अविरतधारं दुर्दिनं—sending down ceaseless torrents. अस्मद्विध—penniless persons such as I am. ‘ रटतु जलधारः पतन्तु धाराः स्युर्नतु तडिन्मस्तोऽपि बान्तु शीताः । इयमुरसि महौषधीव कान्ता सकल-

In other words, the awning flapping in the wind and rain, threatens to tear out by the roots the pillars to which it is fastened—R. प्रचलित disjointed वेदिसंचयस्य of the masonry of the upper floor i. e. the terrace अन्तः यस्य तत् with a terrace disjointed at its extremities. सुधा—mortar. Stanza 51 seems to be interpolated, for after stanza 50, what Charudatta may be expected to propose is तदेहि अभ्यन्तरं प्रविशावः and not a further description of the sky. The rainbow cannot be seen at night. The sky is here fancied to be yawning (विजृम्भितमिव) with its swollen cloudy chin (हनु) lightning—tongue and rainbow—shoulders extended high. A yawning man extends his arms. Figure is उद्रेक्षा. ताली palm. तारं—shrill, highpitched वितपः a branch. मन्दं low. रुक्षं harshly. तालानुसरेण—keeping time ' तालमनुसृत्य. ' Metre उपजाति.

ACT VI.

The swapping of the bullock-carts.

[Here Vasantasena meets Charudatta's little son, Rohasena. The boy is peevish because he can now have only a little clay cart to play with instead of fine toys. Vasantasena gives him her gems to buy a toy cart of gold. Charudatta's servant drives up to take Vasantasena in Charudatta's bullock-cart to the park, where she is to meet Charudatta; but while Vasantasena is making ready, he drives away to get a cushion. Then Samsthanaka's servant drives up with his master's cart, which Vasantasena enters by mistake. Soon after Charudatta's servant returns with his cart. Then the escaped prisoner Aryaka appears and enters Charudatta's cart. Two policemen come on the scene; they are searching for Aryaka. One of them looks into the cart and discovers Aryaka, but agrees to protect him. This he does by deceiving and finally maltreating his companion.—R.]

Pages 95-100 कुत्र पुनर्युष्माकं द्यूतकरः—Vasantasena seems to be charmed with the name द्यूतकर firstly because she feels that he was now all attached to her, for a gambler is ever associated with courtezans, and secondly because the appellation has its own pleasant association, for it reminds her of the recent act of चारुदत्त which testifies to the nobility of his mind. योजय रात्रौ प्रवहणं Have the carriage ready while it is night i. e. early in the morning. कुत्र मया गन्तव्यं—She fears that she should have to go home so very soon 'गच्छत्विति स्वगृहप्रस्थापनशंकिनी विप्रलम्भभीता पृच्छति.' निध्यातः—दृष्टः, तदा मया प्रथमं संतप्तव्यं—because first of all she suffered from separation from चारुदत्त. गुणनिर्जिता won by his virtues (and not by his gold). Read the last line (page 108) शकटिकया (शकटिका—a toy cart) क्रीडयावः किमेतया मृत्तिकाशकटिकया.—the play derives its name from this incident. Vasantasena filled this cart with her ornaments that Rohasena might have a golden cart for himself to play with. It was these ornaments that served as the positive proof of Vasantasena's murder by चारुदत्त, and convinced the Judges of his guilt, who could not thereupon help pronouncing a capital punishment upon him. जात.—a term of affection, ' my love, my child ', Read चन्द्रमुख प्रतिवेशिक—(neighbouring) गृहपतिः—a neighbour, a rich neighbour. भगवन् कृतान्त &c., has occurred before in Act. III, page 63. अपेहि go to, v. I. अवेहि know जानीहि to be construed with न ग्रहीष्यामि. अपवारितं—आच्छादितं—covered (प्रवहणं)—because a woman is to be carried in it. v. I. अवघाटितं—open. प्रसाधयामि—Decorate यानास्तरणं a carriage cushion. नासिकारज्जुकटिको—impatient of or impetuous owing to the nose-string. स्थावरक is the slave of Sakara, while वर्धमानक is चारुदत्त's slave. साटोपं—Haughtily. कथं एष &c., this is आर्यक who has escaped from the prison. चक्रपरिवृत्तिं देहि—give a turn to the wheels. शूरः a gallant or brave servant. V. I. सूरः—charioteer. नेमिशब्दः the sound of the rim of the wheel. ' न व्यतीयुः प्रजास्तस्य नियन्तुर्मेभिवृत्तयः ' Ragh. I. 17. दक्षिणाक्षि &c. The throbbing of the right eye in the case of females is supposed to forbode something evil. अथवा चारुदत्तस्येवदर्शनं अनिमित्तं

(evil omen) परिमार्ज्ययिष्यति—We have dramatic irony here, for she does not see Charudatta till the worst is over. भारवत् &c. Sthavaraka at first felt that the carriage had received some burden and was heavy ; but as he was in a hurry to go in accordance with the order of his master and the carriage was a covered one he did not care to inspect it; he satisfied himself with reasoning as in ‘परिश्रान्तस्य भारवत् प्रतिभासते’ and drove on. दौवारिकः a gatekeeper (द्वारे नियुक्तः). गुल्मः a police-station ; also a military station, as there was no distinction in ancient India between a police and a military force. Manu says that there should be smaller stations for each group of two to five towns, and larger ones for a group of hundred towns ‘द्रयोस्त्रयाणां पञ्चानां मध्ये गुल्ममधिष्ठितं तथा ग्रामशतानां कुर्याद्राष्ट्रस्य संग्रहम् ॥’—M. S. : गुल्मः स्तम्भेऽप्लीहि घट-सैन्ययोः सैन्यरक्षणे’ इति विश्वः. The soldiers here stationed had to keep guard or give the signal of danger; cf. Manu VII. 190 ‘गुल्मांश्च स्थापयेदाम्नाकृतसंज्ञान्समन्ततः । स्थाने युद्धे च कुशलानभीरून्विकारिणः ॥’ also Kamandaki XV. 6. गुल्म also means a subdivision of अक्षौहिणी, but this sense is not meant here. “ मा गुल्माधिकारिकैः संयमितकरशरणो राजकुलं प्रवेक्ष्यसे’ Mudra V. नरपति-अर्णवं-नरपतिबन्धनापदेशा या व्यापत्तिः निधनं तद्विषयं व्यसनं दुःख मेव महार्णवं हित्वा-उत्तीर्य—‘ The great ocean of misery and woe called (अपदेश = व्यपदेश) the king’s prison, or the great ocean of woe resulting from misery under the guise (अपदेश-मिषं, छलं) of the king’s prison’. Dr. Ryder remarks ‘ the slight awkwardness observable, when Sudraka attempts to form long compounds, serves to help our appreciation of Bhavabhuti’s exquisite skill in handling them.’ Imprisonment was, it appears, a form of slow but certain death in those days, or, Aryaka, may mean escaped from imprisonment under the guise of which he was going to be killed by the king’ निगडैकपाशपादबन्धनैकशृङ्खला chain tied to one of his feet. ‘ गजोपमयाः पुनर्दुर्गहत्वं प्रतीयते’—Metre प्रहर्षिणी. विशसने—the loc. for the dative (e. g. चर्मणि द्विपिं हन्ति, यज्ञे रामस्यमातरः जामातुराश्रमं गताः Uttar 1. 3.)—for the purpose of killing me.

Page. 101-103. भाग्यानि good fortune, such as accession to a throne. सिद्धिः—Super human power. गम्यो नृपः; &c, the last two lines of this verse are difficult ; the difficulty lies partly in sequence of thought, partly in the word गम्य which means ‘approachable’ i. e., either

'capable of being pacified' or, 'capable of being attacked' Again it can be taken as शक्या अगम्यो नृपो &c. Then who is बलवान्—Palaka, or Fate or Aryaka ? As it is, the line can be explained as नृपो गम्यः सर्वेषामेव सेव्यः a king commands the homage of all तस्मात् बलवता तेन राजा सह अस्मादृशस्य प्राकृतजनस्य विरोधः एव न प्रसजति—what hostility can I have against such a powerful king ? He ought not to have entertained any apprehensions of such a feeble man as I am and put me in gaol तदिदं निष्कारणं मद्बन्धनम्.' He should have allowed fate to have its own way and ought not to have molested me without purpose. Dr. Ryder suggests a sense which is ingenious but is irrelevant to Aryaka's speech that follows:—' Even success (in attaining the throne) cannot be avoided: a king (i. e. I myself destined to become king) must be appeased (गम्यः); for who can fight with him who is powerful ? " That is, he (king पालक) cannot prevent my becoming king for fate wills it: he had better make terms, for I am potentially more powerful than he—This sense brings out the sense of अपि " अदत्तदण्डः—अदत्तः दण्डः अर्गलं यस्य—unbolted; open. V. l. अनायतार्गलं with bolts that are not stretched out i. e. fastened. तदत्र प्रविश्य &c. because the house being that of a familyman, the policemen are not likely to enter it all of a sudden. विषमशीलैः न अधिगतं गोष्ठीयानं भवेत् for if it contained peevish inmates, they are likely to quarrel among themselves; hence if he entered it, he would have few chances of escape; in the case of good-natured persons, he had every hope of escape, since they would take pity on him. वधूसंयानं—स्त्रीवाहनं—a carriage for a lady. बहिर्नेतव्यं supply भवेत् if it is to be led outside the town and is, by my fortune, empty, then indeed it is sent to me by fate (favourable) since it is unattended. कथं नूपुरशब्दः It is rather surprising that the driver mistakes the clanking of the chains for jingle of anklets. पादोत्फालः—चरणयोः चालनं तेन चालितानां (नूपुराणां)—Shaken by the motion of the feet i. e., shaken while walking. विश्रब्धाः—quiet, fearing or suspecting nothing. भित्वा a pun upon the word नरपतिद्वयं भित्वा i. e. व्याकुलीकृत्य—causing him alarm. प्रतोली—a mainroad—रथ्या प्रतोली विशिखा ' त्रिणी ग्राममध्यमार्गस्य '. प्राकारखण्डः broken rampart. विशस्ताः—fearlessly (perhaps a retort to Viraka's विश्रब्धाः). Dr. Ryder takes it as a vocative, 'my trusty men'. गोत्रान्तरं another dynasty उच्छि- name, art thou going to bring to our notice? दर्शयसि—उपदिशसि and why do you charge us as having remained careless (विश्रब्धं) ?

 चन्दनक did not like Viraka's remark किं स्थ विश्रब्धाः; he has full confidence in himself and his trusty men and is sure that Aryaka cannot escape. कः हरति—for it is not possible for a prisoner to break open the prison and fly unaided. अष्टमो दिनकरः The sun in the eighth mansion.
 भागवग्रहः—शुक्रः. भूमिसुतः—मङ्गलः Mars, जीवः Jupiter, सूरसुतः—शनिः saturn-these ग्रहाः in the respective mansions mentioned, at the time of the birth of a man, forebode severally pain, colic, fatuity, consumption, sorrow, and indigence to him (according to the commentator पृथ्वीधर).
 What Chandanaka means is that whoever attempts to rescue Aryaka has these planets in the respective mansions in his case, that is to say, is sure to meet with woe at his hands. 'जन्मतः'—अष्टमसूर्यफलं मरणं— escaped as he was not yet found out. अपवारितं veiled.

Pages 104-106. यचार्यचारुदत्तं न जानासि &c. Chandanaka's speech bears eloquent testimony to Charudatta's virtues and nobility of character. गुणारविन्द—Who attracts all men to himself by means of his virtues like a lotus by its fragrance and beauty 'सर्वलोकमनोहरणं'.
 मोक्षः—अवसानस्थानं place where the misery of the poor ends i. e. a saviour. शीलमृगाङ्कः—निर्मलपूतचारित्र्येण जनाल्हादकतया चन्द्रः एव. प्राप्तेच राजकार्ये &c. This shows Viraka's high sense of duty to his master.
 पूर्व in both the words पूर्ववैरी and पूर्वबंधुः means 'of the former life' as in the play itself, there is no indication of any previous acquaintance of Aryaka with Viraka or Chandanaka. Insert वर्तमानयोः or संयुक्ष्यमाणयोः between चितायां &c., and हुतभुजोः and the meaning will be plain ' यथा दाहशीलयोरपि द्वयोर्वह्मथोरेकः शुभः अन्यस्त्वशुभः ' . तन्त्रिल-राज्य-चिन्तापर—' तन्त्रं स्वराष्ट्रे चिन्तायां '—Amara—' one in charge of the home-administration' (P) hence, perhaps, the modern Police officer, while बलपतिः may mean ' military commander.' राज्ञः प्रत्यायितः enjoying the king's confidence. भीम was renowned for his skill in pugilistic encounters; it was in such encounters that he killed कीचक highest meritorious deeds. Cf. बद्धांजलिपुटं दीनं याचन्तं शरणागतं न हन्या- तत्किमिदानीमत्र युक्तमनुष्ठातुं—Chandanaka first instinctively promised to save Aryaka; he then remembers his duty to the king. After weighing both these duties against each other, and on further consideration that Aryaka was innocent, that आर्यक was a friend of Sarvilaka who had obliged him and that since, Aryaka was going in Charu-datta's carriage, it would involve the latter in great danger, he made up his mind to follow his first impulse. Construe भीता-भयप्रदानं ददतः यदि after their countries most of which cannot be identified, but these are mostly natives of Southern India. कर्णाट is कर्नाटक, द्राविड (the same as Andhra or तैलंगण), विड is विराट or Berar and चोल is Coromandel.

Pages. 107-109. कर्नाटकल प्रयोगं करोमि-अकारणकलहः or शुष्ककलहः a quarrel intentionally stirred up, as used to be done during the poet's time in कर्णाटक. कस्त्वंमदपेक्षया कस्तवातिशयः—'who the deuce are you, I should like to know' (W). पूज्यमानः &c., you are a king's favourite and a confidential servant, hence it is that you are so much respected; but you can hardly command any respect for a moment if your जाति is taken into consideration. v. I. अनुस्मरसि (for नस्मरसि) should mean 'do you recollect &c.?' शीलविभवेन—out of respect or consideration for your greatness of character ' त्वदीयसद्वृत्तगौरवेण न भणामि; जातिः परायत्ता शीलमेव तु त्वदायत्तमिति न ते जातिदोषमुद्गावयितुमिच्छामि ' it may mean also 'owing to the greatness of my character; I am too noble to speak out; it is below my dignity to do so.' किं कपित्येन भग्नेन why let the cat out of the bag ? ' burst the bubble ? ' अभग्नेमेव तु वृत्तश्रृङ्गसुगन्धिकसिन्धु (wood apple), भग्ने तु वैरस्यमेव दर्शयेत् शून्यं वा स्यात्, एवं त्वमपि निरूप्यमाणो न गण्योऽसि—'you will prove to be as worthless as a broken wood apple (which has a comely exterior without any real essence in it), if I were to expose your real nature and caste. संज्ञा ददाति—'हस्तक्रियया केशवापमभिनयति ' makes gestures, suggestive of a barbar's profession, शीर्णे शिलातले (broken whetstone छुरिकादितेजनपाषाणखण्डः—तलशब्दः स्वरूपार्थबोधकः as in भूमितले करतले) हस्ते यस्य सः. कूर्चग्रन्थि—संस्थापनः—कूर्चग्रन्थिः श्मश्रुगुच्छः beard-knot, scrubby beard. संस्थापनः one who trims ' पार्श्वोत्सारेण सौष्टवाधायकः ' v. I. कुञ्चितग्रन्थिसंस्थापनः a bonesetter, one who replaces sprained or dislocated joints ' (formerly forming part of a barbar's profession). कर्तरी a pair of scissors. Thus Chandanaka says that Viraka is a barbar by caste. संज्ञां &c., चर्मावनद्धवादनचेष्टां करोति.' भेरी is a large drum. पटह a small one. करटकः ' a tambourine भ्राता यस्य सः. Thus Viraka says that Chandanaka comes of a shoemaker's or leather-tanner's family. चतुरंगं कल्पयामि—I shall have you drawn and quartered i. e., I shall have your limbs quartered. One comm. takes it as पुष्टमंगं on the analogy of ' चतुरश्रशोभि ' and explains it as ते पुष्टमंगं कल्पयामि छेदयामि. शुनकसदृश merely barking like a dog i. e., incapable of any other serious step ' वितथगार्जितेन ' or ' you who are like a dog of the king, incapable of independent thought or action. ' आर्ये वसंतसेने &c.,

Chandanaka speaks apparently to Vasantasena and hence uses the feminine gender. अभिज्ञानं परीक्षानिर्वृत्तिचिन्हम्—a passport. स्पन्दते &c. throbbing of the right arm is a good sign, a sign of victory अंगदक्षिणभागे तु शस्तं प्रस्फुरणं भवेत् । अथाशस्तं तथा वामे पृष्ठस्य हृदयस्यच ॥ —मस्यपुराण; also 'वामेतरः संशयमस्य बाहुः । केयूरबन्धोच्छसितैर्नुनोद ॥' Ragh VI. 64, also 'दक्षिणमंगं पुंसः स्त्रियश्चवामं शुभावहं स्फुरितं । प्रियसंगमाय बाहोः कम्पः &c.' The figure is समाधिः. विशिष्टा—requested by me; or to whom I have introduced myself 'आत्मानं निवेदिता.' प्रत्ययिता—in whom I have created confidence about my faithfulness by the gift of a sword and the treatment of Viraka. Prof. Paranjpe takes प्रत्ययिता to mean 'in case you are convinced of the truth of the prophesy'. लुब्धः—Selfishly greedy of a reward in future, in case the prophesy comes to be true. तथा यदि—if it proves true. चन्द्रस्येव आल्हादकेन शीलेन आढ्यः संपन्नः Constr. यथा देवी शुम्भनिशुम्भौ निहत्य अभयदानेन देवान् रक्षयामास, तथा हरिहरादयोऽपि तव रिपून् विनाश्य अभयदानेन त्वां रक्षन्तु.' Shumbha and Nishumbha were two demons who oppressed the worlds: they were killed by the goddess Durga. निष्कामतो मम—Chandanaka means to say that Sharvilaka followed him closely when he issued out of his house. Prof. Paranjpe takes निष्कामतः as an adj., to आर्यकस्य understood. प्रधानदण्डधारकः—दण्डधारसेनाध्यक्षः—the chief of the police; the chief of the criminal department. प्रत्ययकारः ग्राह्यवचनः—a confident officer of the king. एतमेव आर्यकमेव. Cf. Sharvilaka 'प्रधानसभिको माथुरः विरोधितः &c.' Act II.

असंस्कार &c. naturally charming (without any artificial decoration).
 अक्षः axle. परिवर्तनं change (of axle). प्रग्रहः the rein. कर्मन्तोज्जित
 &c.—‘कर्मन्तः राजादीनां नियोगावेशेषः’ पृथ्वीधरः—being in the midst of the road on business by the order of the king ; or simply left at the end of the work. V. L. वर्त्मान्तोज्जित &c. left in the middle of the road;
 here अन्त must be taken to mean ‘ मध्ये or मध्यभागे ’. सावशेषापसारः—
 My escape or flight (अपसारः) is not yet fully effected or yet remains to be fully effected. परभृत इव &c. The simile alludes to the practice of the cuckoos who get their eggs hatched by the crows.
 ‘ प्रागन्तरीक्षगमनास्त्वमपत्यजातं अन्यैर्द्विजैः परभृताः खलु पोषयन्ति ’ Sak. V.
 The cuckoo leaves its eggs in the nest of the crows and are fed and hatched by them because they cannot distinguish them from their own. The cock-koil seats himself on a prominent perch and lifts up his voice and shouts aloud and very soon attracts the attention of the owners of the nest (i. e. the crows) who rush out to the attack and chase him away. Now comes the chance for his wife, who forth with nips in to deposit her egg.’—D. D. Cunningham tical structure ; we must connect अस्मात् with व्यसनार्णवात् (उत्थितं) by ‘ सापेक्षत्वेऽपि गमकत्वात्समासः ’—risen up from the ocean of calamity in which he was going to be drowned. नवोत्थितं—Just (freshly) escaped ‘ अविरोत्तीर्ण ’ गतं इदृशीं दशां—निगडबन्धरूपां दशां—which has attained this miserable condition of wearing shackles. स्नेहः कालं &c. love brooks no delay. वसन्तसेनः &c. Maitreya sees Aryaka inside the carriage and therefore humorously describes him thus. Jv. explains this as कामदेवः खलु अयम् (वसन्तः the spring सेना बलं यस्य). करिकर &c. i. e.

 महाभुजः ‘ आजानुलम्बिनौ बाहू वृत्तौ पीनौ नृपेश्वरः ’—Samudrika—all such marks are indicative of royalty. कथं इदं असमानं प्राप्तः—असमानं a condition that ill befits him. ‘ इदं निगडबधनं स्वस्य असदृशं &c. ’ गोपालप्रकृतिः— a cowherd by origin. स्नेहमयानी (निगडानि) Aryaka means.
 ‘ thereby Charudatta has tied him fast by bonds of love. संगच्छस्व
 &c. put these fetters on your feet now,’ because Maitreya apprehends that they might be caught by the King’s officers and cast in jail for letting off the prisoner ; but निगडानि ought to be in the instrumental. 'It is just possible that there is a smutty pun in संगच्छस्व, that Maitreya means to hint that चारुदत्त, not being able to be united (sexually) with Vasantasena, means to be content to be united with what has actually come in the cart viz. the fetters.'—Ryder. Maitreya's levity is out of place however, in the presence of Aryaka, and therefore Charudatta chides him then and there ' by धिक्शान्तम्, स्वयंग्राहप्रणयेन—by the confidence you yourself reposed in me ' अपरिचितेऽपि प्रणयकृतविस्मयेण ' ; or ' by the favour of an uninvited acceptance ' (P) ' कण्ठे स्वयंग्राहनिशक्तबाहुम् ' Kumar 3. 7. प्रत्यग्रं newly. अलघुसंचारा in which your movements will not be quick ; you will find walking difficult. V. I. अलघुसंचारा ' when concealment is not easy. '—चारुदत्त means that Aryaka would probably be detected if he left the cart. V. I. लघुसंचारा ' your progress will be very little. ' सुलभ &c. crowded, where men are freely moving. क्षेमेण &c. this dialogue is conducted in the course of a शार्दूलविक्रीडित Stanza ; this stylistic device is not uncommon. Sometimes the different parts are spoken by different characters cf. Uttara. I. 33 ; Malati III. 18 ; X. 8 ; sometimes the same character speaks the whole verse but is interrupted by prose speeches from others as in Mudra. VI. 16 ; Ratnavali IV. 18. स्वात्मापि विस्मर्यते—Can one forget his own soul—meaning thereby that चारुदत्त is as dear to him as his own soul यदुद्यते पालके &c. यस्मात् कृतयले पालके सति महती रक्षा न संभवति—Since Palaka is roused or is exerting himself to the utmost, protection will very difficult. Wilson remarks, ' Avoiding him is in harmony with the Brahmanical doctrine on this subject ; at the same time, it is clear that the period of intolerance and persecution had not yet arrived, or he would not have so openly made his appearance in the presence of a Brahman. The भ्रमणक is our acquaintance, the Samvahaka'.

ACT VIII.

[A Buddhist monk, the Shampooer of the second Act, enters the park. He has difficulty in escaping from Samsthanaka, who appears with the courtier. Samsthanaka's servant drives in with the cart which Vasantasena had entered by mistake. She is discovered by Samsthanaka, who pursues her with insulting offers of love. When she repulses him, Samsthanaka gets rid of all witnesses, strangles her, and leaves her for dead. The Buddhist monk enters again, revives Vasantasena, and conducts her to a monastery—R.].

 is being done. अगुप्तं (हृदयं) unbridled, licentious—अगुप्तं (उद्यानं) यथेच्छवि- हारयोग्यं—fit for free enjoyment for all, or, where all can have a free access.
 अनिर्जितोपभोग्यं—(राज्यं)—to be enjoyed without having to be conquered by one's own efforts (2) उद्यानं—where anybody may enjoy freely or which yields delight (from enjoying in it) for which one has to pay nothing. Perhaps here Vita means to rebuke Sakara's brutal conduct by contrasting it with the gentle invitation of the park'. औपच्छन्दसिक metre. उपासकः a true worshipper.
 शकार takes it to mean a barber (नापितः—स हि श्मश्रुवर्धनादिभू- पासकः सेवकः). आक्रोशति abuses, curses, धन्यः पुण्यः &c. धन्य means (1) blessed. (2) infidel, an athiest; and पुण्य means. (1) virtuous, (2) a brick watering trough for watering cattle. This accounts for Sakara's blunder in thinking that he has been called a materialist (चार्वाक) and a brick trough (कोष्ठकं—इष्टिकानिर्मितं निपानं). कोष्ठक also means 'a weaver'; Sakara now also suddenly turns to this sense and asks 'Am a weaver or a potter (कुम्भकारः) ? ; v. l. शरावक—earthen vessel; v. l. श्रावक—a heretic, कोष्ठक also means 'a granary', which sense may do here too as the प्राकृत-धण्ये means धान्यं. (P.).
 कुलित्ययूषसवर्णानि (v. l. शबलानि)—of the colour of (dark like) a कुलित्य preparation. (मराठी-कुलीथ). एकप्रहारिक—'between whose life and death a single blow only intervenes.' तथैव—as it was before shaving. छविः—colour. किणः—scar, hard surface of the skin. दूरं निगूढा- न्तरं वस्त्रान्तं—the hem of the garment, by which the middle part is quite (दूरं) concealed, loose because of the bagging of the cloth, does not fit on his shoulder'. The भिक्षुs wear a single garment in a peculiar manner, and the two ends on one side of it meet in a knot on the right shoulder. It is indeed very difficult to wear it elegantly संप्रधारयामि—Deliberate; take counsel. हन्त न गतः alas ! he (the भिक्षु) has not still departed. पंकाविल—turbid or tainted by mud. विपर्यस्ताः मनश्चेष्टाः येषां तैः—whose mental operations (or mind-thoughts and actions) are all perverse. वर्धन् body. ' अतिनिर्दयतया पाषाणवत् कोमल-तालेशविरहितैः '. मांसवृक्षैः—who are mere growths (trees) of flesh without any power to think 'विवेकलेशश्चैः'. The figure is रूपक. Metre अनुष्टुप. कठोरनिष्पन्द in a very close and motionless embrace. कठोर and निष्पन्द may be taken to qualify लता—'fullgrown and steady', but the first construction is preferable. निर्वृतिं यान्ति— are happy (in the company of fitting mates)—' सद्यश्मिष्टसमागमनिर्वृतिं वनितयानितया रजनीवधूः ' Raghu. Shakara says so instead of मृतोऽस्मि. Perhaps he wants to make a fool of the Vita, for he at once knows that it was Vasantasena who was in the carriage. मुषितौ and खादितौ ought to be interchanged (see Supra छिन्नौ and मृतः). मा नाम let there be no. mistaken notion &c.

'राक्षसी कापि नास्ति—गन्ध means 'a mere smell' 'a particle'.—there is no trace whatsoever of an impossibility (अकार्यं S'akara takes अकार्य in the sense of 'something that cannot be done', 'a sin') for here is no राक्षसी (to be killed, but an ordinary woman viz. Vasantasena, it is not impossible for you to kill her) 'राक्षसीवधो हि दुःसाध्यः (अकार्यः), अस्या वधस्तु न तथा, अतः एषा किल वसन्तसेना'. Perhaps राक्षसी is associated with गन्ध, and Regnaud has called attention to the meaning 'a certain perfume' which is given for राक्षसी and sees a deliberate pun on the part of the author: Dr. Ryder remarks, 'the suggestion is both ingenious and convincing'. One commentator remarks on राक्षसी नास्ति—'राक्षसीसमीपगमनमेव अपाय-भयादकार्यमिति भावः'. अवेशसदृशप्रणयोपचारां—whose spirit of love (प्रणय) and courtesy (उपचार) are unlike (असदृश) that of a prostitute. उडुपं—a raft, a boat 'उडुनो जलात् पाति or उडूनीव पाति.' अनागस् (अन्+आगस् sin)—innocent. पश्यन्ति &c. Pages 129-133 विभवः what is in one's power परिकरं बध्नन् girding up his loins शिरश्चालनसंज्ञा—hint by shaking his head that she need not be afraid of Shakara. qv. takes this to mean 'Vita that old jackal—set me thinking by rudely shaking head up and down'—and the result was the plan he hit upon 'लब्धो मया उपायः'. मल्लक—'a small vesse made of a leaf 'पत्रपुटिका'. Shakara wants to compare his family with something very great such as the ocean but absurdly compares it with मल्लकः (which is small and not large) v. l. गल्लकः a drinking vessel. अंगिकारयितुं—in order to make her accept my proposal. अत्र here i. e. in doing or not doing an evil deed. स्फीताः rife. एष प्रपलाय्य गच्छति—He may even run away. विविक्षविश्रम्भरसः—whose essence consists in familiarity due to privacy; 'love gains in charm in the security of privacy.' The प्राकृत-णाशेण represents Sanskrit न्यासेन and also नाशेन. The pun is thus obvious—Shakara takes the second interpretation and gives the promise. कपटकापटिकः—Who is a fraud and a parasite. वेष्टनं turban. किं ते वयं काष्ठमया मनुष्याः—Are we, in your eyes (ते—तव सम्बन्धे), men or images made of wood, lifeless, wanting in strength, action or power to retaliate ? He wonders that in spite of his entreaties to accept him as her lover, she pays him very little heed as to a wooden image, not even taking the trouble of casting a glance at. V. l. किं सेवकं कष्टमया मनुष्याः—Construe किं तथापि.

‘सेवकं मां नेच्छसि—why don’t you accept me, who am your servant or at your service. Alas ! कष्टमया मनुष्याः men have indeed a very miserable life to lead (since their wishes are not satisfied in spite of all the trouble they undergo on that account), Wilson translates ‘If you still disdain me and will not accept me as your slave, what have I to do longer with mankind ?.’ Dr. Ryder thinks that ‘Certainly Vasantasena understands the speaker to mean a comparison between himself and चारुदत्त to the disadvantage of the latter; Samsthana asks her why she does not desire him, and why she prefers a poor man; she answers that the poor man’s character is good, while he is bad’. He translates किं सेवकं कष्टमया मनुष्याः ‘ why are poor men the object of (your) devotion ? ’ and remarks ‘ the matter would be simpler if we could read सेवन्ते or सेव्याः ’. निकृष्ट a wretch. परिलोभसे—a grammatical irregularity ‘temptest’. Read न हि कमलं &c. सुचरितचरितं whose acts are like those of a virtuous man. जातदोष—guilty (since he expressed his desire to murder her). शोभा—Honour. सहकारः a mango tree. पलाश and किंशुक mean the same. The Kimshuka has red flowers but these have no fragrance. Similarly Shakara has wealth but no merits. पलाश also means ‘ a demon, an eater of raw flesh. ’ Perhaps the abuse lies in this sense. मोटयामि—shall strangle, शक्र and महेन्द्र are the same. वालिपुत्र is अङ्गाद who was sent by Rama to Ravana’s court as his ambassador. रम्भा was not known to have a son—this may be Shakara’s mistake for राधापुत्र. कालनेमि was the uncle of Ravana, deputed by him to kill Hanuman, कालनेमिं दुराधर्षं रक्षः परमदुर्जयम् । चतुरास्यं चतुर्हस्तमष्टनेत्रं भयावहम्’. It was also the name of a demon killed by Vishnu ‘ आत्मानमिह सञ्जातं जानन् प्राक् विष्णुना हतम् । महासुरं कालनेमिं यदुभिः स व्यरुध्यत ॥ ’—Bhagvata. सुबन्धु perhaps the one in बृहत्कथा. धन्धुमार also known as कुवल्याश्व was a king of solar race. He killed the demon धन्धु who tormented the sage उत्तङ्क. त्रिशङ्कु was the father of Harischandra. He wanted to ascend to heaven in his mortal body and performed a sacrifice for this purpose with विश्वामित्र as his priest, as Vashistha his family priest refused to undertake the task. While he was being raised up to heaven with the help of Vishvamitra’s supernatural power, Indra stopped him in the middle and Vishvamitra helped him up. So he dangled in the middle. Cf. त्रिशङ्कुरिव अन्तराले तिष्ठ '. Sak II. He remained suspended as a constellation in the southern hemisphere भारत is a वर्ष and not युग. सीता lived in the द्वापर age. असम्पूर्णमनोरथः because she had not enjoyed Charudatta's company to her heart's content. तस्य रक्तां who loved him (चारुदत्त). रमणे-रमणाय loc. for dat. The line means 'who (really) came to her death (कालांगतां), when being in love, she came (thinking) to sport with him when he had come' (R.) and in order to justify these accusatives we must supply हत्वा as suggested by Jivananda. निःश्वासा— V. I. निःश्वासे is better—why do I boast of the strength of my arm ? She dies merely at my breathing. अम्बा is here used as a term of endearment. पाशेन उत्त्रासिता मारिता—I killed her with the noose (of my arms), while she was already frightened, स वा वञ्चितः &c. the line is desperate '.—My brother is deprived (of an excellent opportunity of witnessing my valorous act), V. I. स वा वञ्चितभ्रात्रकः मम पिता—qv. explains this line as स मम वञ्चकचूडामणिः प्रसिद्धः मम पिता (since he deceived even his brother) and सा द्रौपदीव सर्वेषु भुजगेषु प्रसिद्धा (since Draupadi enjoyed in the company of five husbands) मम माता—मम-पिता वञ्चकः, मममाता च चरित्रहीना अहं पुनस्तयोरनुरूपः पुत्रः, अनेनच पतता स्त्री &c. this woman killed by the fall of the tree is the one whom Viraka sees in the trial scene. वयमपि पातिताः &c. निरयं (hell) गमिताः— not only those who commit a sin are damned but also those who witness it. अत्याकुलं कथयसि—असम्बद्धं—You are making contradictory statements. and also seem to be much agitated.

ACT IX—THE TRIAL.

[Samsthanaka accuses Charudatta of murdering Vasantasena for money. In the course of the trial, it appears that Vasantasena had spent the night of the storm at Charudatta's house ; that she had left the house the next morning to meet Charudatta in the park ; that there had been a struggle in the park, which apparently ended in the murder of a woman. Charudatta's friend, Maitreya, enters with the gems which Vasantasena had left to buy Charudatta's son a toy cart of gold ; these gems fall to the floor during a scuffle between Maitreya and Samsthanaka. In view of Charudatta's poverty, this seems to establish the motive for the crime. and Charudatta is condemned to death.—R. Charudatta pleades 'not guilty' to the charge, but offers no defence and finally confesses the crime].

' From the way in which they interfere, they seem to sit as joint-assessors or commissioners with the judge. The number three or more is correct. The judge may be a Brahman, a Kshatriya, or a Vaishya, but the assessors should be Brahmans alone. Merchants however may be called in ' for the better satisfaction of the parties as commerce was developed, and the mercantile law became more technical '. The judge took evidence, ascertained the facts, applied the law to the case in hand, and gave his findings on the issues of the case. This is the body of the woman that was knocked dead by the sudden fall of a tree and who was first observed by Vita (See Page 133) V. l. विलुप्तं is preferable to विलुप्यमानं as the latter does not seem to correspond to the facts of the case.

Pages 154-157 वैषम्यं लोकव्यवहारस्य—The ways of the world are indeed very mysterious and hard to know, Prof. Paranjpe takes this to mean ' the difficulty of judicial administration '. यथा यथेदं—इदं may mean ' चारुदत्तवृत्तम् ' or ' this case '. संकटम्—complicated. दुर्ग्रहम् difficult to gauge. सुसन्ना व्यवहारनीतयः—' The facts of law are very clear here '—Wilson ; or, ' व्यवहारस्यमार्गाः (नीतयः) सुसन्ना अतिमात्र-विश्वस्ताः दुर्गमाः मतिस्तु &c. What the judge means to say is ' the facts before us point to one thing; viz. the guilt of Charudatta, while my mind can never bring itself to conceive the possibility of it and hence is quite at a loss, or, is at a dead stand i. e. cannot proceed further in this matter '. ' from a legal point of view, Charudatta proves to be guilty but my conscience does not accept the conclusion arrived at although I cannot prove the facts before me to be groundless '. The judge is convinced of Charudatta's innocence but cannot account for the strange coincidence of the circumstances before him. हन्तुकामबुद्धिः—With a mind on murdering others. इह—अस्मिन् व्यवहारपरीक्षास्थाने. किं should be connected with both the statements, यः जातिदोषात् यन्मृषैव वदति तद्ग्राह्यं भवति किम् । न तद्विचारिणी-यम् किम्—Is it not to be questioned ? or न तद्विचारिणीयं should be taken as an affirmative statement ; it is absolutely not to be taken into consideration '. अद्य ममोपघातः—I am ruined today. ब्राह्मणि refers to his wife, Dhuta. मिथ्यैव नन्दसि परव्यसनेन नित्यं—The meaning is obscure ; (1) नित्यं परव्यसनेन (उपलक्षितोऽपि)—although beset by terrible misfortune मिथ्यैव नन्दसि—शोकस्थाने प्रहृष्यसि you are in joy when you should be in tears. (2) Jv. interpretes परव्यसनेन ' with mere childish amusements, परेण केवलेन व्यसनेन बाल्यसुलभेन क्रीडनेन, ' (3) परव्यसनेन—' while others (for instance, your father himself) are plunged in misery '. मिथ्यैव because it is not right to be indifferent to others' feelings or condition. परव्यसनेन may also be taken as ' mere have no real charm in them). Read शेषमेषो. There should be a mark of punctuation after हेतुभूतः, तपस्वी this pitiable wretch शोच्यः पापकर्मा शोच्यः एव ननु विद्वेष्यः. हेतुभूतः—व्याजमात्रं—has become simply an instrument. ' विधिः (कृतान्तः) मदीयं दुर्दैवं मां व्याहरति—हन्तारं आदिशति, ' अवस्था- दोषात्—owing to the disadvantage of my present state. पुरस्थापनं founding a city. आरामः a garden, अनीशः—poor दरिद्रः—Dr. Ryder takes it to mean ' not master of himself, mad '. उच्छृङ्खलक—a libertine who has broken all bounds of morality and social etiquette.

 कृतजनदोषभाण्ड—receptacle (भाण्डं) of crimes imputed to people'. P. takes कृत=हिसित and translates ' fountain-head of the mischief of the murderous '. V. I. कृतजनदोष भण्डं—these are two words meaning imputer of crimes to people and buffoon. (भण्ड). Mr. Sharma translates it as ' stuffed vessel of every thing obnoxious to mankind.'
 अधोमुखाः The judge hangs down his face in shame and sorrow at Charudatta's fall in such a pitiable manner. पतितः पातयिष्यति—will, while falling down, bring about my fall (ruin). भूतार्थः the fact as it has happened. केवलंवदतः (मे) &c. Charudatta offers no defence.
 He seems to have no faith in the honesty of the judge ; this is unjust The judge has been all throughout kind and considerate to him and sympathises with him. Charudatta saw that if he were to tell the truth, he would be obliged to admit that it was Aryaka and not Vasantasena that drove in his carriage and then it was high treason against the reigning king to help the escape of the king's foe. Besides now that Vasantasena was dead, he had no charm in life and thereupon he welcomed death by confessing the crime. Cf.
 न च मे वसन्तसेनाविरहितस्य जीवितेन कृत्यम् (page 179). अंगारकः Mars.
 प्रक्षीणः waning. The sense is:—Charudatta who is like Jupiter, has in Shakara Mars opposed to him and Vidushaka now appears at his side, like a comet, since it was Vidushaka's dropping down the ornaments that made the evidence complete against Charudatta.

Pages 158-161 अक्षिभ्यां मन्त्रितं &c. Cf. 'वक्ताध्यक्षो नृपः शास्ता सभ्याः कार्यपरीक्षकाः—Vyawahara Mayukha. निर्वास्यः to be expelled. अक्षतैः intact, untouched. The judge is uniformly kind to Charudatta. Cf. Dr. Ryder thinks that it is more probable that it refers to his wife. Rohasena's mother. अपश्चिमं for the last time. अयमपश्चिमस्ते रामस्य शिरसा पादपङ्कजस्पर्शः'—Uttar. I. विषसलिल &c. drinking poison, remaining under water for a particular period, weighing in a balance, or entering fire, were forms of ordeal, and if a man came out safe and unharmed, he was said to have passed the ordeal and was declared innocent of the crime charged against him. But as there was full evidence against the accused, the judges never thought of asking the criminal to undergo an ordeal.

ACT X.

[' Two headsman are conducting Charudatta to the place of execution Charudatta takes his last leave of his son and his friend Maitreya. But Samsthanaka's servant escapes from confinement and betrays the truth; yet he is not believed, owing to the cunning displayed by his master. The headsman are preparing to execute Charudatta, when Vasantasena herself appears upon the scene accompanied by the Buddhist monk. Her appearance puts a summary end to the proceedings. The news is brought that Aryaka has killed and supplanted the former king, that he wishes to reward Charudatta, and that he has by royal edict freed Vasantasena from the necessity of living as a courtesan. Samsthanaka is brought before Charudatta for sentence, but is pardoned by the man whom he had so grievously injured. The play ends with the usual epilogue '—R.]

Pages 162-169 तत् किम्—What then? कारणं the reason (of being afraid). The difficulty is removed by taking कालण as the representative of कारणं 'pain'. The line then may be translated. 'What then? Do not consider the pain; being adepts, in the new fangled managing of executions and fetherings, we are skilful in cutting off heads and impaling in short order'. Jv. takes कारणं to refer to their leading the criminal. The Chandalas are consoling Charudatta ('do not consider the pain' in their own way. The word नव seems to be used to assure the person condemned that although, being new, he may be awkward in ascending the gibbet &c., they will manage the affair skilfully without his feeling any pain. करवीरं—(मराठी—कण्हेर) oleander. स्तोकं स्तोकं little by little. पितृवनं—cemetary. विरसं harshly रक्तगन्धानुलितं—coated with (रक्तचन्दनं). Dr. Ryder takes it as 'annointed with the odour of blood'. तर्कयन्ति—long for. शकुनः bird (साधूनामेव शकुनानां अभिवासं आश्रयम्). हस्तकः marks of hand. पिष्टचूर्णविकीर्णः—who is scattered over with powdered rice-flour (तण्डुलपिष्टरजोभिः) तारतम्यं judgment (used ironically); or difference between the good and the bad. मकुपेतम् एतत्—what has befallen me (this calamity). मर्त्यं भिगस्तु— fie upon the condition of being a man (because of its uncertainty).

 रिक्तं मण्डनं नगर्या एवालंकारः. सुखसंस्थितानां चिन्तायुक्तः सर्वः लोकः लोके भवति— every one feels for those who are in easy circumstances (चिन्तापरः भवति उपकारे प्रवर्तते). विनिपतितानां of those who have fallen from their former position. Cf. इह लोकोऽपि धनिनां परोऽपि स्वजनायते । स्वज-नोऽपि दरिद्राणां तत्क्षणाद्दुर्जनायते ॥ '. स्वजातिमहत्तर is addressed to one of the Chandalas ' the best of your race '. प्रतिग्रहं कर्तुं—to receive a favour. किमस्माकं &c. for a Brahman is forbidden to receive gifts from a man born in low caste. तत्परलोकार्थं &c. Cf. the opening scene in Act VII. Mudrarakshhasa. आशुक is the same as पितः चिरं पिपासितः &c. Shall suffer from thirst for a long time for the libation of water which his little son will offer him in his tiny hands would be very meagre to quench his thirst. Perhaps he means that is soul will be hovering about in anxiety about his son left an orphan after his death. The position of the sacred cord is changed when libations are offered to gods and पितृs—' निवीतं मनुष्याणां प्राचीनावीतं पितृणां उपवीतं देवानाम् '. The three positions are generally called सव्य, अपसव्य and निवीत. निरूपपदेन नाम्ना—by a name to which no word of respect is attached. अहतमार्गा—with its course unimpeded.

किशोरी—a young mare. नियतिः Fate, प्रत्येषितुं पुरुषमाक्रमितुं याति. V. I. प्रतीष्ट याति—goes wherever it likes. Read विनमितमस्तकं न कर्तव्यम्. व्यपदेशाः Titles are शुष्काः empty. अस्य किं विनमितमस्तकं न कर्तव्यम्—what circumstance (अस्य किं) is there of him, that we should not bend our head before him i. e. show him the marks of respect ? V. I. शुष्का प्रदेशा अस्य, किं विनमितमस्तकेन कर्तव्यम्—his limbs (प्रदेशाः) are parched (i. e. he is as good as dead). Why need he conduct himself with bent head ? (But this reading is not satisfactory), Jv. reads शुष्का व्यपदेशाः अस्य ? किं प्रणम्य मस्तके न कर्तव्यम् ? व्यपदेशाः—कुलनामादयः शुष्काः किं अपि तु न लुप्ताः ; किं अस्य गुणादिकं प्रणम्य मस्तके न कर्तव्यम्—अपि तु कर्तव्यमेव. अंसेन—round the neck and the portion thereabout. आघाताः the place of execution. शामित्रं—Place of immolation (from शमितृ the carrier of slaughtered victim). लभ् with आ—to kill immolate as a victim in a sacrifice). अनौशीरं—(not consisting of Ushira (बाळा—Marathi). Cf. ‘ अन्तःकरणतत्त्वस्य दम्पत्योः स्नेहसंश्रयात् । आनन्दग्रन्थिरेकोऽयमपत्यमिति बध्यते ॥ ’—Uttar III. प्रणष्टजीवाशं—whose life is beyond hope (owing to his infamous deed). व्यसनकृतां wretched V. I. व्यसनकृतां which is the work of destiny. यत्रेदं जीवितावसानं फलमपि—‘ in which this death is but a gain ’. विदूरतया—on account of the long distance. कुलपुत्रविहगानां वासपादपाः &c.—a noble statement on the part of Sthavaraka. Cf. साधुशकुनाधिवासं supra, दण्डनिगडः Stocks. द्रोण a particular kind of cloud from which rain streams forth as from a bucket. ‘ अभिवृष्य मरुत्सस्यं कृष्णमेघस्तिरोदधे ’—Raghu X. 48. विषाक्तेन—smeared with poison. शालीयक्रेण with food made of Shali rice. खड्गण ringing. This lengthy speech of Shakara brings out the double character of the fool and is very humorous (cf. यस्य अस्मादृशः &c.).

Pages 170–179, अपसरत दत्तमार्गे &c. shows the contempt in which Shakara was held in general. दुष्टबलीवर्दः—mad bull. तत्कृतवैर एष यद्गणति तत्सत्यं किं—is it to be relied upon (since it is actuated by spite against me) ? शोभनं भणति—It is curious to observe that the executioners seem to possess discretionary powers at the place of execution. They hear statements, judge of facts, make Charudatta confess his crime, seize Shakara and thus do every thing that is not the function of the executioners. मम मोक्षणाय in order to release me. न संवदति does not agree to it. ‘ मद्भाष्यं नानुवर्तते ’ आश्रमं—hermitage (because of the inviolability of its sacree nature). मा गमिष्यसि—That you may not. लघु पराणयामि—I shall take him away (back) quickly. संखल the drum-stick. व्यसनं एव महार्णवः तस्मिन् प्रपातः पतनं—fall into, the ocean of sorrow or calamity. पालिका—turn. लेखं कुर्मः—Let us reckon out or cast lots (मराठी चिठ्या टाकून पहाणें). Mr. Sharma quotes ' drawing lines without counting ; then crossing every third of them ; the presence or absence of the uncrossed final decides the thing in question '. राजपरिवर्तः—a revolution. Shakara at once turns pale at the mention of राजपरिवर्त for in the absence of his brother-in-law, the present king, he would be nowhere, we are also skilfully introduced to what follows. दूषितस्य is to be construed with भाग्य-दोषात्. प्रबलपुरुषवाक्यः (राजराष्ट्रियाधिकरणिकादीनां). यत्र तत्र स्थिता वा wherever she is. स्वस्वभावेन—in conformity with her sweet nature. His wish is fortunately granted by Providence. प्रतिवृत्तं—hanging down. V. I. परिवृत्तं विपर्यस्तं mangled. दीर्घगोमायवः jackals with their neck stretched out to reach the body. वेष इव &c. अट्टहासस्य रूपान्तर-मिव भीषणमित्यर्थः—the face opened in death appears to have, worn an uniform aspect of laughter. उत्तिष्ठत्यततो व्यसनपातिका शवस्य पुनरस्ति—यथा वायुनोत्क्षिप्तं वासस्तदुपरमे प्रयत्ननिरपेक्षं निपतति एवं प्राचीनकर्मोत्थापितं शान्ते तस्मिन् स्वेनैव पतति कलेवरम्—that the dead body rises up and falls is like the casting off of a garment. Cf. वासांसि जीर्णानि यथा विहाय नवानि गृह्णाति नरोऽपराणि &c. B. Gita सन्धारय comfort-अस्थानपरिभ्रान्ता—who fainted in an out-of-the-way place. विषमभराक्रान्त ... The simile has occurred before in Act II, Karnapuraka's speech. उत्तानोभूत्वा—lie flat (for if उत्तान be taken to mean ' erect ' the erect position would be unnatural for the operation proposed. Then further on Charudatta stands up सहसोत्थाय which he could not do, if he was already erect ; and Vassantasena too who had fallen on his breast rises up). मुष्टौ in the handle. सद्यवासिनी—The family deity of the Chandala who was perhaps a resident of the Sahyadri mountain. आशप्त—Because they were ordered to impale Charudatta and not to cut off his head with a sword. चिकुरः tresses of hair. यशवाटगतस्य—It is wonderful how the executioners know that the king was at the place of sacrifice. भ्रान्तं (मनः) labouring under illusion. जीवातु काम्यया—जीवातु life, revival—with a desire to restore me to life. V. I. जीवातुकम्पया. ' रे हस्त दक्षिण मृतस्य शिशोर्द्विजस्य । जीवातवे विसृजशृङ्गमुनौ कृपाणम् ' ॥—Uttar. II. 10. असदृशी—unbecoming of you. विद्येव—विद्या the Sanjivani विद्या by which the dead can be brought to life. Read मृतोऽपि and 42. ध्रियेत—may live. रक्तं &c. ' It is interesting to note that Jimutavahana, in the fourth act of the Nagananda (a drama by Shri Harsha), uses the red marriage garments as the insignia of death. Perhaps this passage and Mri. X. 43. stand in some connection with each other; if so, we have a suggestion for the placing of the Mrichchhakatika. ' This view of Dr. Ryder perfectly agrees with ours in taking धावकभास as the author of the play. See Introduction. वरवस्त्रं the bridegroom's garment. अतिदक्षिणतया Vasantasena is sure that his extraordinary generosity must have brought him into this sad plight. प्रमविष्णुना—who was very powerful (because of being related to persons in power). मनाक्—Very nearly (but for a slight accident).

Pages 180–188 संवाहचिन्तकः—चिन्ता is used in the sense of 'care' i. e. duty. The stanza 45 is sung by some bard or perhaps by शर्विलक himself who appears on the scene. वृषभकेतुः the bull bannered god i. e. S'iva. दक्षयज्ञस्य हन्ता—दक्ष the father of Parvati, did not invite Shiva, his son-in-law for a sacrificial cession that he had instituted. Parvati being thus insulted, burnt herself in fire. Shiva consequently destroyed दक्ष and his sacrifice (see opening verses of Ratnavali). The description is appropriate as आर्यक killed पालक at a sacrifice. षष्ठमुख Shiva's son स्कन्द. क्रौञ्च Name of a mountain cleft by Kartikeya; it is also the name of a demon. शुभ्रकैलास केतुं (गां) (earth which has the Kailasa for its white banner तदनुजयति and now आर्यक is victorious over the earth, his worst enemy having been killed. शेषभूतां—Very sacred like the शेषा—cast off flowers from an idol. ' तथेति शेषामिव भर्तुराशामादाय मूर्ध्ना मदनः प्रतस्थे ' Kumar III. 22. Perhaps there is a pun here, the word meaning 'last' also. बलानि मन्त्रिणः तैश्चहीनं—abandoned by his army and ministers. बलरिः—Indra, the foe of Bala (or बल i. e. वृत्र). वसुधाधिराज्यं—in which there is sovereignty over the whole world. गुणधृतया—attached to him by his virtues. (2) गुणः रज्जुः drawn by arrayed forces of the military commander. राष्ट्रिय also means ‘ a king ’. Read तिष्ठतामेषः. यः must be supplied before शत्रुः कृतापराधः.

 नेपथ्ये कलकलः—The portion from this to युष्मत्प्रसादेन on page 186, is an interpolation, ‘ the work ’ of Nilkantha, who considered that the author had not brought his characters together at the close with sufficient reason, and therefore devised the next scene. The cause assigned for the original defect seems rather an unaccountable one, ‘ through fear of sunrise सूर्योदयभयतः ’; but the phrase is proverbial one, implying ‘ finishing in a hurry ’. Nilkantha’s verse is यत्सूर्योदयभयतः कविनोचित-

BENEDICTION.

May Siva's profound meditation, (which is) concentrated on Brahman in consequence of the absorption effected by abstract vision, protect you (the audience)—the meditation of Siva, whose knees are wrapped round with the coils of the snake doubly-folded as a sort of ligature while he sits in the paryanka posture, (the operation of) whose senses are suspended owing to all knowledge (of external things) being shut up by the suppression of the internal vital airs, and who with his eye of truth visualizes within Himself his own self which is destitute of all kinds of organs.

And again :—

May the neck of Nilkanta protect you—the neck that resembles a dark cloud, and whereon shines the creeper-like arm of Parvati, like the streak of lightning. (2)

(At the close of benediction)

PRELUDE.

Manager—Enough of this tedious task that stifles the curiosity of the audience. Saluting, therefore, these honourable gentlemen, I humbly submit to them that we are going (preparing) to enact the drama, known as "Mrichchhakatika". Its author was Sudraka, who was a celebrated poet, of profound wisdom, who was the best & twice-born (viz. Kshatriyas), whose gait was like that of the lord of elephants, whose eyes resembled those of the Chakora bird, whose countenance was like the full moon, and who was possessed of a stately person. (3)

And again :—

Sudraka knew the Rig and Sama Vedas, the mathematical sciences, fine arts, and the management of the elephants, and obtained, through the grace of Siva, eyes that were freed from darkness (i. e. ignorance). Having beheld his son enthroned as a king, he performed a grand and glorious Aswamedha sacrifice, and after having attained the age of hundred years and ten days he entered the sacred fire i. e. died. (4)

And yet again :—

Intently attached to warfare, void of sloth, eminent among those versed in the Vedas, rich in penance, and fond of fighting with his two arms the elephants of his foes,—such was, indeed, the king Sudraka. (5)

In this work of his, (it is related),

In the city of Avanti, there was one Charudatta, who was a merchant (by profession) and Brahman (by birth), and who, though young, was yet very poor. A courtezan, whose name was Vasantasena, and who was charming like the vernal beauty, was attached to him on account of his excellences. (6)

King Sudraka composed this (drama) that is based upon the pure joys of their loves and in which are exhibited the course (working) of state-craft, the foul administration of justice, the ways of the wicked, and the inevitableness of fate. (7)

[Walking about and looking around him.]

Why! This concert-hall of ours is empty? Where could all the actors have vanished? (Reflecting.) Ah, I understand.

Desolate is the house of him who is childless; desolate is the time to one who has no faithful friend; desolate are the regions of the earth to a fool; but, everything is desolate to the poor. (8)

I have finished the musical concert. Having been long engaged in music, my eyes, with their moving pupils, are owing to hunger crackling like a lotus-seed, dried up by the fierce rays of the summer sun. I will just call my wife and ask if there is anything for break-fast or not. But, ho, considering the business (of making myself intelligible to her), and also the exigence of the performance, I am to speak in Prakrit. Alas! Alas! (On account of my hunger and on account of my being long engaged in music, my limbs are as weak as dried-up lotus stalks.) I shall hence go home and learn whether my wife has got anything ready or not. [Walking about and looking around.] Here is our house. I will just go in. [Entering and looking about.] Wonderful! What, indeed, can this strange preparation in our house possibly be? The street is full of long streams of rice-water. The ground, spotted black, whereon the iron kettles have been dragged, looks as lovely as a young damsel having a frontal mark on her face. Hunger pinches me, now, much more, as if enkindled by these savoury smells. What! Can it be that any hoarded treasure of my ancestors has come to light? Or, is it, perhaps, that I, being exceedingly hungry, fancy the whole world to be made of rice?

There surely is not any breakfast in our house; and I am dying of hunger. And, yet, the preparation is all unusual. One girl grinds perfumes; another strings flowers. (Reflecting). What does all this mean? Well, I shall call my good wife and learn the truth. (Looking in the direction of the dressing-room.) Worthy lady, come hither, please.

Actress—(Entering) Here I am, sir.

Manager—Lady, you are very welcome.

Actress—Let your honour command what business is to be accomplished.

Man—Worthy lady, (Repeating) "On account of my hunger and on account of my being long engaged in music, etc. etc. etc., is there anything to eat, in our house?

Act—There is everything, sir.

Man—What is there? What is there?

Act—For instance—there is rice boiled with sugar, clarified butter, curdled milk, rice; and, in fact, there is everything delicious that is worthy of being tasted by your honour. May the gods always be thus gracious to you!

Man—Is all this in our house? Or, are you joking?

Act—(Aside.) I shall just jest with him. (Aloud) Indeed, sir, it is all in the market place.

Man—(Angrily) O, unworthy lady, may you be disappointed in this way! The deuce take you! Having been raised aloft, I have been thrown down, like a scaffolding over a projecting wall (or the heavy stone attached to the end of a beam).

Act—Forgive me, sir, forgive me! It was only a joke.

Man—Then, why is all this unusual preparation? One girl grinds perfumes, another weaves garlands, and the ground, itself, is adorned with offerings of flowers of five different colours.

Act—To-day, a fast is observed.

Man—What is the name of this fast?

Act—The giver of a desirable husband.

Man—In this world, lady, or in the next?

Act—In the next world, sir.

Man—(Angrily) Please look at this, gentlemen, please look at this. A husband is sought after, for the next world, at the sacrifice of my food.

Act—Pacify yourself, sir, pacify yourself. The fast is observed in order that you yourself might happen to be my husband in my next birth too.

Man—Who suggested this fast to you?

Act—Your own dear friend Churnavridhha.

Man—(Angrily) Ah, Churnavridhha, son of a slave! Oh that I could see you sometime or other cut off by the angry king Palaka, like the perfumed tresses of a newly married girl.

Act—Pardon, please, sir. This fast concerns only the next birth of your honour.

(She falls at his feet.)

Man—Get up, lady, and tell me what is to be done to (the accomplishment of) this fast.

Act—A Brahman, worthy of us, as being of our own rank must be invited.

Man—You may go then, worthy lady. I shall myself invite a Brahman, worthy of us, as being of our own rank.

Act—As your honour commands. (Exit.)

Man—(Walking about.) Good heavens! In this flourishing city of Ujjain, how am I to find out a Brahman, worthy of us, as being of our own rank? (Looking about.) Ah! here comes in this direction itself Maitreya, the friend of Charudatta. Very well, I will ask him. Sir, Maitreya, kindly be the first to dine in our house to-day.

(Behind the Scenes.)

Sir, kindly invite some other Brahman. I am particularly engaged (otherwise), now.

Man—Sir, the dinner is ready, and there shall be no rival. Besides, you shall be offered a dakshana into the bargain.

(Again, behind the Scenes.)

Sir, your request has been unaccepted even at the beginning. What is, then, your importunity for, urging me to (comply with your request) at every step?

Man—My request has been unaccepted by him. Very well I shall invite some other Brahman. (Exit.)

(Enter, with a cloak in his hand, Maitreya.)

Maitreya—(Repeating as said above, "Invite some other Brahman etc. etc.") Rather, I, Maitreya himself, ought really to be seeking invitations from others. [O fortune! what a wretched state I am reduced to? When the worthy Charudatta was still prosperous,

I used to gratify only with the most deliciously fragrant sweetmeats, prepared day and night with great care; and seated at the gateway of the inner courtyard, surrounded by hundreds of dishes, I would simply touch them like a painter, and thrust them aside. Like a bull in the city market, I would remain chewing the cud (at leisure). But now that he is poor, I have to wander about here, there, and everywhere (to pick up such crumbs as I can get) and return here only to roost (for my refuge), like a domesticated pigeon.]

This mantle scented with jasmine flowers has been sent for the worthy Charudatta by his good friend Churnaviddha, who bade me take it to Charudatta when he has finished his devotions. So now, I shall look for the revered Charudatta. (Walking about and looking around.) Here comes Charudatta, taking oblation unto the household-deities, after having finished his devotions.

(Then enter Charudatta as described, and also Radanika.)

Charudatta—(Looking up and sighing with grief.) (While formerly, at the threshold of the door of my house, the oblation (offered by me) was immediately eaten away by swans and multitudes of cranes, now at that very same threshold on which are shot up blades of grass, the cavity-full of grain (offered by me) falls, being (merely) licked (by mouth) by worms. (9)

(He walks about very slowly and seats himself.)

Vidushaka—Here is worthy Charudatta. I shall then approach him. (Approaching) Adieu to you, sir! May you prosper!

Charudatta—Lo! Here is come Maitreya, the friend in all seasons. Welcome; Friend, be seated.

Vid.—As you command. (He seats himself.) Friend, this mantle which is scented with jasmine flowers has been sent to you by your dear friend Churnaviddha who bade me.—“This is to be presented by you to the worthy Charudatta, when he has finished his worship to the gods.” (Presents the mantle.)

(Charudatta receives it and remains thoughtful.)

Vid.—Well, what are you thinking about?

Cha.—Friend,

Verily, happiness appears to advantage, after one has undergone miseries, in much the same way as the sight of a lamp amidst thick darkness. On the other hand, that man who falls from affluence to penury is one who is really dead, and exists only as being supported by a body. (10)

Vid.—~~Friend, what will you prefer, then, death or poverty?~~

Cha.—Ah, my friend,

Between poverty and death, certainly shall death be agreeable to me and not poverty. Death is only a transient suffering (of short duration) while poverty is an endless misery. (11)

Vid.—My dear friend, enough of your repentance; in the case of you whose riches is only transferred on to the needy people even the very ruin (of wealth) wins an added charm as in the case of the moon reduced to the slender fragment after having been drunk by the gods.

Cha.—My good friend, I do not grieve for my (ruined) wealth. Look,

It is this alone that afflicts me, that, my guests abandon my house, because of its wealth having vanished just like the fluttering bees that abandon the temples of an elephant the season being over, when the dense rut thereon has been dried up. (12)

Vid.—Oh, friend, confound these riches, which are but merely morning meals (i. e., as trifling as). Like cowboys in a wood, that are afraid of wasps, these riches resort only to places where nobody has a bite at them.

Cha.—

Truly, my anxiety is not due to the loss of my wealth; for riches come and vanish in accordance with the course of fortune. But, it is this fact that pains me to the quick, that people fall off from even the friendship of him who has lost his support of wealth. (13)

And again :—

Because of penury, man is overcome with shame; over-whelmed with shame, he is deprived of his dignity; devoid of self respect, he is despised; being despised, he becomes depressed in spirits; depressed in spirits, he is overcome with grief; overwhelmed with grief, he becomes bereft of his intellect; and when consequently his judgment fails, he is at last brought to ruin. Alas! poverty is the root of all misfortunes (14)

Vid.—Friend, remember that wealth is after all but a trifle, and cease your grief, (be cheerful).

Cha.—My friend,

The poverty of a man is to (to him), a home of cares, a great humiliation, another (form of) enmity, the abhorrence of his friends, and the source of dislike of the general public and of his kinsmen. It is the cause of the humiliation from his wife and consequently it begets a desire to retire to the forest. And, the fire of grief (dormant) in the heart, does not burn but is constantly tormenting. (15)

Then, friend, I have already offered oblation unto the household gods. You, too, go and present the offering to the divine Mothers at the place where the four roads meet.

Vid.—No, I will not go.

Cha.—Why not ?

Vid.—Because the gods are not gracious towards you, even though thus worshipped. So, what use is there in worshipping gods ?

Cha.—Nay, friend, don't say so. This is the constant duty of every house-holder.

The gods when they are ever adored with penance, contemplation, and prayers, and oblation offerings, are always gracious towards their devotees. There is no use in discussing about it. (16)

Therefore go, and present the offerings unto the Divine Mothers.

Vid.—[No, sir, I will not go. Send (lit. appoint) some body else. With me, a poor Brahman, everything seems to go wrong (lit. in an adverse manner), in the same way as in the case of a reflection in a mirror, the right side becomes the left, and the left the right. Besides, at this hour of evening, courtezans, sensualists, servants and royal favourites move freely upon the king's highway. I shall fall a prey to them like a mouse in the path of a fierce snake greedy of frogs. But what will you do sitting here ? ]

Cha.—Very well; wait awhile; I shall go through my holy meditation.

[ Behind the scenes. ]

Stop, Vasantsena stop !

[ Then enter Vasantsena pursued by Vita, Sakara and his servant. ]

Vita—Vasantsena ! stop, stop !

Throwing forward your feet that are expert in the art of dancing, why do you, whose delicacy is transformed by fear, flee like a female deer frightened by the pursuit of hunter, your terrified eyes darting tremulous side-glances ? (17)

Sakara—Stop, Vasantsena, stop !

Why do you flee ? Why do you run ? Why do you retreat, stumbling at every step ? Oh, young maiden, be kind. You shall not die; stop, please. My heart, O sweet lady, is burning with love, like a piece of meat that has fallen into a heap of blazing coals. (18)

Cheta.—Stop, worthy lady, stop !

In terror, you flee away from me like a pea-hen in summer with a tail in full-feather; but my lord and master is leaping after you like a young cock in the wood. (19)

Vita.—Vasantsena, stay, stay!

{ Why do you run away trembling like the young plantain tree trailing after you your red garment whose skirt is moving in the wind, and throwing now and again multitudes of buds of red lotuses, thereby resembling the cave of red arsenic shattered by the axe? (20)

Sak.—Stop, Vāsantsena, stop!

You inflame my passion, my desire, my love; and at night you deprive me of my sleep in bed; but now, you fly in terror from me, stumbling at every step. But you have fallen into my hands as Kunti fell into those of Ravana. (21)

Vita.—Vasantsena,

With strides far excelling mine own, why do you run like a female serpent, overcome with fear for the Lord of the birds (i. e. Garuda)? Running very fastly, I can even arrest the speed of the wind itself (lit. can I not &c.). However I shall make no effort to overtake thee, O, fair-limbed one! (22)

Sak.—Friend, friend.

She is a whip to lust of the stealers of coin (i. e. thieves) she is fish-eater, figurante, of snub-nose, destroyer of family, untameable, casket of love, courtesan, receptacle of good ornaments, harlot and concubine. I have invoked her by these ten names and still she does not love me. (23)

Vita.—Like a female crane starting away from (lit. afraid of) the thunder of clouds why should you flee from us, overcome with fear? Your cheeks are being rubbed by the tossing ear-rings so that you resemble the lute struck by the nails of Vitas. (24)

Sak.—Why do you run like Draupadi afraid of Rama while your various ornaments make a jingling and a tinkling noise? Here shall I seize you quickly, as Hanuman seized Subbadra, the sister of Visvvasu. (25)

Cheta.—Sport with him who is beloved of the king, and you shall eat flesh and fish. When they can get fish and flesh, dogs do not prey upon carrion. (26)

Vita.—Worthy Vasantasena,

Oh! Wonderful! Why do you advance in terror and amazement looking like the guardian goddess of the city, as you wear a girdle resting on your slender waist and glittering with starlike gems, and also have a (pale) countenance like the rubbed powder of red arsenic? (27)

Sak.—Hotly pursued by us, as is the female jackal by hounds in a forest, you run hastily and impetuously, stealing my heart with its (very) roots. (28)

Vas.—Pallavaka ! Pallavaka ; Parabhritika ! Parabhritika !

Sak.—(With fear.) Friend, a man, a man !

Vita.—Don't fear. Don't fear.

Vas.—O, Madhavika ! O, Madhavika !

Vita.—(Laughing.) Fool ! She is seeking her attendants.

Sak.—Friend, friend, is she (after all) seeking a woman ?

Vita.—Why, of course.

Sak.—I will kill hundreds of women. I am a brave man.

Vas.—(Finding herself lonely.) Alas ! Alas ! Indeed, even my attendants have disappeared. I must trust to myself alone for my escape.

Vita.—Search about, search about.

Sak.—Vasantasena, bewail, bewail, for your cuckoo, Parabhritika, or for Pallavaka, or even for all spring days. Who is going to protect you, when I am pursuing you ?

Be he Bhimasena, the son of Jamadagni, or even the tenheaded Ravana, the son of Kunti ! seizing thee by the hair I shall act in imitation of Duhsasana. (29)

Look here, look here ?

The sword is very sharp and (your) head, too, is turned to us. I shall cut off the head, or better, kill you. Enough of this running of yours ; verily, he who is about to die will not live. (30)

Vas.—Worthy sir, I am a weak woman.

Vita.—Hence it is that you are still alive.

Sak.—That is why you are not killed.

Vas.—(Aside.) Oh ! Even his courtsey appals me ! Very well ; let it be so. (Aloud.) Sir, do you seek any ornament from me ?

Vita.—God forbid ! Worthy Vasantasena, the creeper of a pleasure-garden does not deserve to be robbed of its blossoms. Therefore, speak no more about your ornaments.

Vas.—Then, what is all this about ?

Sak.—I am an excellent personage, a regular Vasudeva ; and you must love me.

Vas.—(Indignantly) Hush ! get you gone : you talk what is base and unworthy.

Sak.—(Clapping his hands and laughing.) Friend, friend, just see awhile ; this courtesan lady is very affectionate towards me in as much as she says to me, "Come, you are weary, you are fatigued," No, I have not been going astray (walking) in any village or town. Worthy lady, I swear by my friend's head and by my own feet, it is only by chasing about at your heels that I have grown tired and weary.

Vita.—(Aside). What! The fool takes it to be श्रान्त (weary) when she says श्रान्त—(Aloud.) Vasantasena, you say something that is inconsistent with the living of a courtesan. See :—

Let it be remembered that the abode of a courtesan is the free resort (lit. friend) of youth. Also remember that you, a courtesan, are like a creeper that grows by the road-side. You have a person that has its price and is, consequently to be secured by wealth. Therefore, Oh! good one, serve equally the man you love, and him you hate. (31)

Moreover :

[The wisest and the most learned Brahman, the meanest and the idiotic outcast, both bathe in the self-same pool. A blooming creeper is bent low beneath the peacock, no less beneath the crow. Sudras and others cross (waters) by (or are ferried over in) the very same boat by which the Brahmans, the Kshatriyas, and the Vaisyas, do cross. You are a courtesan, and so, like a tank, a creeper and a boat, bestow your welcome upon all alike. (32) ]

Vas.—Verily, merit alone inspires love, and not violence.

Sak.—Friend, friend, ever since this born slave-wench went to the garden in the temple of Kamadeva, she is in love with Charudatta that penniless wretch, and she does not love me. His house is to the left. Let my friend act in such a way that she does lip from our hands.

Vita.—(Aside.) This fool speaks out that very thing that ought to be concealed. What! Vasantsena is attached to the worthy Charudatta! It is indeed rightly said that a gem suits with a gem. Therefore let her go. I have had enough of this fool. (Aloud.) O, son of an unmarried woman, is the house of that famous merchant on our left?

Sak.—Exactly so. His house is to the left.

Vas.—(Aside). Oh, wonderful! If it is true that his house is to the left, I am really obliged by this wicked fellow in the every act of injuring me, in as much as he has enabled me to meet my beloved.

Sak.—Friend, friend, in this pitchy darkness, while she is visible yet, Vasantsena has really escaped, like a grain of soot in a heap of black beans.

Vita.—Oh, it is pitch dark, indeed!

My keen eyesight is obstructed by the sudden entrance of gloom.

and on account of darkness, my eyes even though opened, are, as it were, really closed. (33.)

And again :—

Darkness anoints, as it were, the limbs of the body; the heavens shower as it were, black collyrium; and my eyesight has become unprofitable, like the service rendered to a worthless man. (34)

Sak.—Friend, friend, I am looking for Vasantsena.

Vita.—O, son of an unmarried woman, is there anything (indication) by which you can trace her?

Sak.—Friend, like what, for instance?

Vita.—The tinkling of her ornaments, for instance, or the fragrance of her garlands, blended with her perfumes.

Sak.—I hear the fragrance of her garlands, but as my nose is filled with darkness, I cannot clearly see the tinkling of her ornaments.

Tita.—(Aside. To Vasantsena.) Vasantsena.,

True it is that you are not visible amidst the darkness of the nightfall, like the lightning hidden in the union of the interior of clouds; but yet, the fragrance of your garlands, as well as the tinkling of your anklets, O timed one, will betray you. (35)

Have you heard me Vasantasena?

Uas.—(To herself.) Heard and comprehended, too. (Acting as if removing her anklets, and pulling off her garlands. Walking a few steps and feeling by the hand.) Lo! Here do I feel the wall of the house, and here is a side-entrance. I understand, also, by the tactual preception (as my fingers tell me) that this entrance of the house is closed.

Cha.—Friend, I have finished by meditation. Therefore, go presently and present the offering unto the Divine Mothers.

Vid.—No: sir, I shall not go.

Cha.—Alas! Unfortunate I am!

On account of a man's poverty, his relatives do not act up to his words; even his intimate friends turn away from him; his miseries multiply; his vitality declines; the lustre of his moonlike character fades, and every sinful act, even though committed by others is ascribed to him. (36)

Moreover :—

None ever keeps company with him; nor does any speak to him with due respect. He is looked at with contempt when he comes to the houses of the rich during festivals. Being poorly clad, he avoids the opulent even at a distance, on account of shame. Really, I consider poverty as another and the sixth heinous crime. (37)

And again :—

O, Poverty ! I pity you and my anxiety is as to whither thou, after having dwelt thus in my frame as a friend, wilt go when my illfated body is consumed. (38)

Vid.—(With feeling of shame.) Well, friend, if I am to go, then, let this Radanika go with me, to keep me company.

Cha.—Radanika, accompany Maitreya.

Cheti.—Yes, Sir.

Vid.—Worthy Radanika, do you take the offering, as well as the lamp, while I shall unfasten the side-door. (He does so.)

Vas.—The private entrance is laid open, as if it were out of compassion for me. I shall now get in. (Looking in.) Alas ! Alas ! a light ! (Puts out the light with the skirt of her garment and enters.)

Cha.—Maitreya, what was that ?

Vid.—The lamp has been blown out by the wind that rushed in a lump, when the side door was opened. Radanika, go out yourself by the side door. I shall just step in the house and light the lamp from the quadrangular interior courtyard, and will be with you again immediately.

Sakara—Friend, friend, I am looking for Vasantsena.

Vita.—Keep on seeking, keep on seeking !

Sak.—(So doing). Friend, friend, I have caught her ! I have caught her !

Vita.—Idiot, it is I (that you have caught.)

Sak.—Remain silent, staying in this very same place (Searching again and seizing the Cheta.) Friend, friend, she is caught ! she is caught !

Cheta.—Master, it is I your servant (that you have caught).

Sak.—Here, friend ; here, Cheta ; stay now both of you where you were stationed. (Searches again and now seizes Radanika by the hair.) Friend, friend, now is caught Vasantasena ! now is she caught ?

She who ran away in darkness, but was betrayed by the fragrance of her garlands, is grasped now by her locks of hair as Draupadi (was caught) by Chanakya. (39)

Vita.—Thou who art in pride of youth going after a nobly born youth, art grasped by thy hairs which are rich with flowers, and which are worthy of being honoured. (40)

Sak.—Here you are seized by your delicate hairs on the head. O, young maiden, scream, squeak and squeal, for Sambhu, Siva, Shankara, or even Iswara. (41)

Radanika—(In terror.) Worthy sirs, what does this mean?

Vita.—O, son of an unmarried woman, this is, indeed, another voice.

Sak.—Friend, friend, just as a cat changes her tone when she wants to steal (is covetous of) cream, so also has this slavewench changed her voice.

Vita.—Changed her voice? Strange! And yet it is possible.

She has disguised her voice, as she is clever in practising deception, being well-versed in arts, and conversant with theatrical performances. (42)

Vid.—( Entering ). Wonderful! The flame of the lamp flutters very much in the gentle evening-breeze, like the heart of a goat that is brought near a sacrificial post (for slaughter). ( He approaches and discovers Radanika ). Radanika!

Sak.—Friend, friend, a man! a man!

Vid.—It is not proper, it is not becoming at all that strangers should intrude on the abode of worthy Charudatta, just because he has become poor now.

Rad.—Worthy Maitreya, look at the insult that is done to me.

Vid.—What! insult done to you? No, it is an insult done to us.

Rad.—Verily, it is an insult done to yourself.

Vid.—But they are not using violence?

Rad.—Yes, Yes.

Vid.—Really?

Rad.—Really.

Vid.—( Raising his staff angrily ). Sir, this won't do. In its own abode, even a dog is very fierce, and much more a Brahman such as I am. With this club of mine that is crooked like the fortunes of persons like us, I shall batter your head, O villain, as if it were the head of a dry bamboo.

Vita.—Have mercy, O great Brahmana have mercy.

Vid.—( Discovering Vita ). This man is not the sinner, ( Discovering Sakara ). Indeed, this is the sinner. Aye wretched brother-in-law of the king, Samsthanaka, you scoundrel, you villain, this is perfectly proper. Isn't it so? Though perhaps it may be that the respectable and worthy Charudatta has become poor, yet are not his virtues an ornament to Ujjaini? And so his house is intruded upon, and an insult like this is done to his attendants!

Insult not a man because he is in adverse circumstances; really none are counted poor by Fate. On the other hand, a man, who is destitute of virtue even though rich, is alone really poor. (43)

Vita.—(Betraying his embarrassment.) Have mercy, O great Brahmana, have mercy! Really, this has been done, not through insolence, but because, we mistook her for some one else. For,

We are seeking for an amorous maiden.

Vid.—What! this one?

Vita.—Heaven forbid!

One who is the mistress of her youth. She slipped away, and mistaking this lady for her, we committed this (unintentional) indecorum (lit. violation of morality.) (44)

Please accept this all-in-all of humblest supplication. (he drops his sword, and with folded hands falls at his feet.)

Vid.—Good man, rise, rise. In ignorance, you were reviled by me; now that I know you, I ask your pardon.

Vita.—Really speaking, it is you that must be conciliated in this case. I will get up, then, on condition.

Vid.—Speak out, sir.

Vita.—That you will not tell Charudatta what has happened here.

Vid.—I shall not tell.

Vita.—O Brahman, this favour of yours is respectfully borne on the head by me; for, even though armed, we are completely conquered with weapons of excellent virtues. (45)

Sak.—(Indignantly.) What for, my friend, did you fall at the feet of this wicked fellow, making him a cringing salutation?

Vita.—I was afraid.

Sak.—What were you afraid of?

Vita.—Of the excellent virtues of the famous Charudatta.

Sak.—What are these virtues of him, entering whose house, even something to eat is not to be found?

Vita.—No, no.

He has become impoverished because of acts of kindness done to persons like ourselves, and none was despised by him when in his prosperity. He is empty now after quenching the thirst of needy men, as is a well-filled pool parched up in the summer season (by relieving the thirst of the travellers.) (46)

Sak.—(Impatiently.) Who is this fellow, the son of a slave-wench?

Is he that famous and valiant Swetaketu, the son of Pandu? Is he, Ravana born of Radha, or is he Indradatta? Is he Asvatthama, the son of brave Rama and Kunti? Or is he the son of Dharma? (47)

Vita.—Fool! Really, he is the noble Charudatta.

[Unto the needy, he is the wish-yielding tree bending low beneath his fruit-like virtues; he is a helping kinsman to the virtuous; he is the mirror of the learned; he is the touchstone of righteous conduct, and he is an ocean that never transgresses its barrier of character. The doer of good to all, he is never arrogant, and is the treasure of all manly virtues; he is courteous and liberal. He alone is worthy of admiration; in the plenitude of his merits he may be said to live, indeed; others merely breathe. (48) ]

Therefore, let us be gone.

Sak.—Without (taking hold of) Vasantasena?

Vita.—Vasantasena has disappeared.

Sak.—How?

Vita.—Like the sight of the blind, like the strength of the sick, like the wisdom of the blockhead, like the success of the indolent, like the supreme learning of the dull-witted (one of weak memory) and dissipated, and like the feeling of love to an enemy, so did she vanish, when you crossed her path. (49)

Sak.—I will not go hence until I recover her.

Vita.—Have you never heard this?

An elephant may be held by the tying chain, a steed is curbed by reins, but a woman is won by the heart; and if you have not one, you had better depart. (50)

Sak.—If you are going, go alone. I am not coming.

Vita.—Very well; I am off.

[Exit.]

Sak.—Really, the master has disappeared. (To Maitreya,) you man with a caret on the head, you manikin. sit down, sit down.

Vid.—We have already been asked to take a seat.

Sak.—By whom?

Vid.—By destiny.

Sak.—Stand up, then, stand up!

Vid.—We shall.

Sak.—When?

Vid.—When Fate is again kind to us.

Sak.—Aye, weep, then, weep.

Vid.—We are already made to weep.

Sak.—By whom?

Vid.—By poverty.

Sak.—Aye, laugh, then, laugh.

Vid.—We shall laugh.

Sak.—When?

Vid.—When the worthy Charudatta is again in prosperity.

Sak.—Aye, wicked fellow, tell the beggar Charudatta in my name, thus :—“ A certain courtesan lady named Vasantasena, of fair complexion, and covered with gold, and charming like an actress bursting in view in a new play, is very much attached to you ever since she went to the garden in the temple of Kamadeva; and she has entered your house when we tried to conciliate her by force. If you send her away yourself, and hand her over to me, then I shall be friends with you for ever for restoring her to me easily without any law suit in court. But if you don't restore her, there shall be hatred between us to our death. Also remember.

A pumpkin whose stalk is smeared with cow-dung, a dried vegetable, fried meat, and rice cooked in wintry nights, these all do not get rotten (putrify,) by lapse of time. (51)

Tell this to him craftily and prettily; tell this to him in such a way that I can hear, sitting as I am in the little pigeon house terrace of my mansion. If you tell this in any manner otherwise, I shall grind your head like a wood-apple fruit caught in the crack of a door.

Vid.—I shall tell him.

Sak.—(Aside.) Cheta, is our friend really gone?

Cheta.—Exactly so.

Sak.—Then let us quickly depart.

Cheta.—Let my master take then the sword.

Sak.—Let it remain in your hand.

Cheta.—Here is the sword. Please take it, sir.

Sak.—(Taking the sword by the wrong end.)

Like a jackal that is pursued by the yells of dogs and bitches, I go to my house, bearing on the shoulder the barkless sword, which is red like the radish and which (now) sleeps in its sheath. (52)

[Both walk about and then Exeunt.]

Vid.—My good Radanika, this outrage done unto you must not be communicated to the respectable Charudatta. I am sure the sorrow of that poor man would only thereby be doubly increased.

Rad.—Good Maitreya, I am, indeed, Radanika; I can hold my tongue.

Vid.—So be it.

Cha.—(To Vasantasena.) Radanika, Rohanesa who likes to enjoy the breeze is suffering from the chillness of the eveningtime. Therefore please take him inside the house and cover him with the mantle. [He gives her the mantle.]

Vas.—[To herself.] How is it that he takes me to be his servant? (Receiving the mantle and scenting its perfume. Ardently to herself.) Oh, wonderful? The mantle is fragrant with jasmine. His youth does not appear to be wholly indifferent (to the pleasures of this world.) [She wraps it about her, so as not to be observed.]

Cha.—Well. Radanika, take Rohasena and enter inside the house.

Vas.—(To herself.) Alas! I have not the good fortune to enter your inside.

Cha.—Why, Radanika, you do not even answer me. Alas!

When a man attains by force of fate that condition, which is miserable because of the decay of his fortune, then even his friends become his enemies, and even they who were long attached to him become indifferent to him. (53)

(Approaching Radanika)

Vid.—Sir, here is Radanika.

Cha.—Here is Radanika? Who is this other, then?

This unknown lady has been desecrated by contact with my mantle.

Vas.—(To herself.) Say, better, consecrated.

Cha.—She looks like a digit of the moon, hidden amidst the autumnal clouds. (54)

Or, rather, it is not proper to gaze at another's wife.

Vid.—Oh, sir, you need not fear that you are looking at another's wife. This is Vasantasena who has been in love with you ever since she saw you in the gardens of Kamadeva's temple.

Cha.—Indeed? This is Vasantasena?

(To himself.) The love that she has created in me at the decline of my fortunes, subsides in my own body, like the anger of a coward. (55)

Vid.—O, friend, the brother-in-law of the king says—

Cha.—Well?

Vid.—“A certain courtesan lady, by name Vasantasena, who is of fair complexion, and who is covered with gold upon gold and who looks like the actress bursting in view in a new play, is much attached to you ever since she saw you in the garden of Kamadeva's temple, and she has entered your house when we tried to conciliate her by force.”

Vas.—(To herself.) “Tried to conciliate by force”—it is true. I am really honoured by these words.

Vid.—“If you send her away yourself and hand her over to me.
M. 3.4.

then I shall be friends with you for ever, for restoring her to me readily without a law suit in court. But if you don't restore her, there shall be hatred between us to our death."

Cha.—(Disdainfully.) He is a fool. (To himself.) Ah! this maiden is worthy of the worship that we pay a goddess. For now, Urged repeatedly to enter the house, she moves not, in regard to the condition in which she is unfortunately born. Even though she can command a variety of speech owing to her intimacy with men, she does not talk boldly. (56)

(Aloud.) Lady Vasantasena, I have unwittingly committed an offence, for, I greeted as a servant one whom I did not recognise. I bend my head to ask your pardon.

Vas.—It is I that have offended your honour by intruding on this place which is unworthy of me. I bow my head to ask your forgiveness.

Vid.—Your heads, in bowing prettily, meet together, like a couple of rice-fields. I, too, bow my head like a camel-colt's knee and beseech you both to rise up.

Chu.—Be it so; let there be no further ceremony.

Vas.—(To herself.) This has been put (expressed) very cleverly as well as beautifully. Considering how I came hither, it is not proper for me to remain here longer. Well, I will at least say this much. (Aloud.) Worthy sir, if I am really fit to be obliged by your honour, I should be glad to leave these ornaments in your house. It is for the sake of these ornaments that these villains pursue me.

Cha.—This house is unsuited to such a trust.

Vas.—You mistake, sir! It is to men and not to houses that deposits are entrusted.

Cha.—Maitreya, let these ornaments be received.

Vas.—I am much obliged to you. [She hands over to him ornaments.]

Vid.—(Receiving.) May Heaven bless you, madam!

Chu.—Fool! This is but a trust.

Vid.—(Aside.) What if they should be stolen by thieves?

Chu.—In a very short time—

Vid.—What she has entrusted to us, becomes ours.

Cha.—I shall restore them.

Vas.—Worthy sir, I desire to go to my home, accompanied by this gentleman.

Chu.—Maitreya, accompany this worthy lady.

Vid.—She walks gracefully like a female swan; accompanying her, you alone shall shine like a gay flamingo. I am but a poor Brahman, and wherever I go, I shall fall a victim to the people, just as an offering that is carried to the cross-roads will fall a prey to dogs.

Cha.—Very well, I shall myself follow this worthy lady.

Vid.—Vardhamanaka, light the torches.

Cheta.—(Aside to Vidushaka.) Aye, light torches without any oil?

Vid.—(Aside to Charudatta.) These torches of ours are like harlots, who disregard lovers of no wealth. They are without oil (love) and won't light up unless you feed them.

Cha.—Maitreya, very well; no need of torches. For, see:—

Pale like the cheeks of a lovely maiden, the moon which is lamp unto the royal road, rises along with its train of stars, and its white beams descend amidst clouds of darkness, like streaming milk amidst mire from which water oozes out. (57)

(With love.) Worthy Vasantasena. This is your ladyship's home. Pray enter. [Vasantasena gazes ardently at him, then exit.]

Cha.—Friend, Vasantasena is gone. Come, let us go home.

The royal road is lonely, and the watchmen (alone) are walking about. We must take care to avoid (forestall) treachery (being deceived) for the night is ever full of crimes. (58)

(Walking about.) And you shall guard this golden casket by night, and Vardhamana by day.

Vid.—Very well.

[ Exeunt. ]

ACT II.

—:o:—

( Entering. )

Maid.—I am sent to my mistress (Vasantasena) with a message by her mother. I shall therefore enter and go near the respectful lady.

( She walks about and looks around. )

Here is my mistress, picturing something in the heart (i. e. brooding over something). I shall approach her.

( Then enter the love-lorn Vasantasena seated, and also Madanika. )

Vasantasena.—Well, girl, and then—

Madanika.—Madam, you have not spoken anything. What do you mean by saying “and then” ?

Vas.—What did I say ?

Maid.—You said, “and then”——

Vas.—(Knitting her eye-brows.) Yes, I remember.

( Approaching. )

Maid.—Madam, your mother desires that you should perform your ablutions, and do worship unto the gods.

Vas.—Lady, you may tell my mother that I don't bathe to-day and that therefore, the Brahman himself should perform the worship.

Maid.—Yes, mistress.

(Exit.)

Madanika.—My dear mistress, it is my love for you, and not an officious (or fault-finding) nature that makes me question you what this all really means.

Vas.—Madanika, whom do you see me to be like ?

Maid.—I should guess from your ladyship's absent-mindedness that you are at heart in love with some gentleman.

Vas.—You have rightly guessed ! You are indeed Madanika who is clever in judging or fathoming the hearts of others.

Maid.—It is most pleasing news to me. Indeed, you are obliging thereby glorious Cupid, who is the great occasion of joy to youths. So tell me, mistress, what prince or courtier your ladyship pays homage to.

Vas.—Girl, I wish to love, and not to serve.

Maid.—Is it some Brahman youth that is loved, who is distinguished for great learning. ?

Vas.—A Brahman I should have to venerate.

Mad.—Or, is it some young merchant grown enormously wealthy from visiting many countries ?

Vas.—The merchant has to go to foreign lands abandoning even his beloved whose love for him is very great, and thus creates but intense grief that arises out of painful separation.

Mad.—Madam, neither a prince, nor a courtier, nor a Brahmin, nor a merchant ! Who is it then that my mistress loves ?

Vas.—Girl, you went with me to the gardens of Kamadeva's temple ?

Mad.—Yes, mistress, I went with you.

Vas.—And yet you ask, as if you were a perfect stranger.

Mad.—Oh ! I know. Is it the man who comforted (received) you when you asked to be protected ?

Vas.—Well what is his name ?

Mad.—Why, he lives in the (big) merchant's quarter.

Vas.—But I asked you for his name.

Mad.—Madam his name, which is most auspicious to utter is the respectful Charudatta.

Vas.—( Joyfully. ) Good, Madanika, good. You have rightly guessed it.

Mad.—( Aside. ) So much for that. [ Aloud. ] Madam it is heard that he is poor.

Vas.—That is why I love him ; for, a courtesan who sets her heart on a poor man is free from all blame in the eyes of the world.

Mad.—But, madam, do even bees swarm around the mango-tree, when its blossoms have fallen ?

Vas.—It is hence they are spoken of as mere honey-makers (but not those that enjoy honey.)

Mad.—Well, Madam, if you love him, why don't you approach him without any delay ?

Vas.—Girl, if I should approach him at once, then, because he can't make any return—no, I don't mean that, it would become hard to see him.

Mad.—Is that the reason why you left your jewels with him (in his hands) ?

Vas.—Oh, you have guessed rightly.

[ A voice behind the scenes. ]

Halloa, sirs, yon gambler arrested for (nonpayment of) ten suvarnas, is running off!—running off ! Hold him, hold him ! Stop ! Stop ! I see you from here.

[ Enter hurriedly without removing the curtain. ]

Samvakaka.—Alas ! The state of a gambler is most painful.

I am kicked by the die as if by a she-ass let loose from her new tether. I am transfixed by (the die know as) Sakti, as Ghatotkacha was pierced by (the mace) Sakti hurled down by Karna. (1)

No sooner did I see the keeper busy with the score, than I escaped from his sight. Now that I have come down upon the road, with whom am I to take refuge ?

While the keeper and the gambler are looking somewhere else for me, I shall enter this empty temple walking backwards into it, and turn myself into a deity. [ He remains thus after making all sorts of gestures ].

[ Then Enter Mathura and the gambler. ]

Mathura.—Halloa, sirs, yon gambler who owes me ten suvarnas has escaped ! has escaped—Seize him ! Seize him ! Stop ! Stop ! you are seen from here.

Gambler.—Even if you run to the nether regions, or take shelter with Indra himself, except the one keeper of the gaming house, even Rudra cannot protect you. (3)

Math.—Whither, you deceiver of the good gaming house-master, whither do you flee ? Your limbs shake and shiver with fear. You stumble over rough and smooth every step and stain your family and reputation. (4)

Gam.—( Observing the foot-print. ) Here he goes. And here the track is lost.

Math.—[ Gazing at the foot-prints and reflecting. ] Look ! the foot-prints are reversed. And the temple has no image in it ( After a moment's thought. ) Oh ! That rouge has walked into the temple with his feet reversed.

Gam.—Let us be after him.

Math.—Very well.

( They two act as if entering the temple and observing Samvakaka. make signs to each other. )

Gam.—What ! a wooden image ?

Math.—No, no ; it is an image made of stone.

( They shake it in various ways and make signs to each other. ) does not matter much. Come, let us have a game. ( He starts the game as hard as he can. )

Sam.—( Making various efforts to suppress the manifestations of desire for gambling. Aside. )

[ The rattling of the dice tantalises the heart of a man who is penniless, in the same way as the sound of a drum works on the heart of a king that is bereft of all his realm. (5)

I am resolved that I shall not play. Gambling is as bad as being thrown down from the top of mount Meru. Notwithstanding all this, the rattle of the dice which is sweet like the warble of cuckoos, allures my heart. (6)

Gam.—The throw is mine, the throw is mine !

Math.—No, it is mine, it is mine !

Sam.—(Coming up quickly from a different place.) Isn't my turn !

Gam.—The man is caught.

Math.—(Seizing him.) You, scoundrel, you are now caught. Pay me the ten suvarnas.

Sam.—I shall pay you to-day.

Math.—Pay me instantly.

Sam.—Have patience. I will pay you now.

Math.—Aye, pay me now immediately.

Sam.—My head is getting dizzy. (He falls on the ground.)

(Both beat him in various ways.)

Math.—There you are bound by the gambler's ring.

Sam.—(Rising, with dejection.) What ? bound by the gambler's ring ? Confound it ! Indeed the conventional rules of us, gamblers, cannot be transgressed. Wherefrom can I pay then ?

Math.—Give me then a surety.

Sam.—I shall do so. (Approaching the gambler—Aside.) I will pay you half the money ; release me for the other half.

Gam.—All right.

Sam.—(Approaching the keeper of the gaming house.) I will give you surety for a half. You release me from the other half.

Math.—Where is the harm ? Let it be so.

Sam.—(Aloud.) You forgave me a half, sir ?

Math.—Yes.

Sam.—(To the gambler.) And you let me off a half ?

Gam.—Yes.

Sam.—Now I shall go.

Math.—Pay me the ten suvarnas. Where are you going !

Sam.—Look at this, gentlemen, look at this. Here just a pledge was given to one of them for a half, and the other forgave me a half. And even after that, he is dunning me, a poor helpless creature.

Math.—(Seizing him) O, villian, my name is Mathura and I am clever enough. I am not to be deceived this time. Pay, me, you rogue, every bit of my money, this very moment.

Sam.—How can I pay ?

Math.—Sell your father and pay.

Sam.—Where to get a father ?

Math.—Sell your mother and pay.

Sam.—Where can I get a mother ?

Math.—Sell yourself and pay.

Sam.—Have mercy, please, and lead me to the highway.

Math.—Go along.

Sam.—So be it, (He walks about.) Gentlemen, buy me of this gambling master for ten suvarnas. (Looking to the skies.) What do you say ? Is it that you wish to know what I can do ? I shall be a servant in your house. What ! He has gone without even answering. Very well, here's another. I shall speak to him. (He repeats his offer.) What ! this man, too, is gone without even taking notice of me. Ah ; this is how I fare, luckless one, ever since Charudatta lost his fortune.

Math.—Will you pay ?

Sam.—How can I pay ? (He falls down.)

(Mathura drags him about.)

Sam.—Good gentlemen, protect me, protect me.

(Then enter Darduraka.)

Darduraka.—Gambling is, indeed, a sovereignty without a throne.

The gambler never minds defeat at all he levies tribute (money) from all and spends it daily. Like the king, he draws revenue at pleasure and counts the opulent amongst his servants.

Moreover it is by gambling that money is won ; it is by gambling also that wife and friends are acquired ; it is through gambling alone that man gives and enjoys, and it is through gambling alone that everything is lost. (8)

Besides,

Everything that was mine was taken away by Tray ; my body was parched up by the Deuce ; the Ace then set me on the street ; and now I go the Four completing my defeat. (9)

(Looking before him.) Here comes in this very direction, Mathura, our old gambling-master. Well, I can't avoid him ; I shall hence wrap myself in my vest. (He makes various gestures and examines his cloak.)

This cloth is sadly indigent in thread ! this cloth is further decorated with hundred holes ; this cloth can't fit for wrapping oneself with, so this cloth looks best only when it is rolled up tight. (10)

Yet after all, what could that wretched fellow (Mathura) do to me ?

I can stand erect with one foot on the ground and the other in the air, as long as the sun is in the heavens. (11)

Math.—Pay. Pay !

Sam.—How can I pay ? ( Mathura drags him about. )

Darduraka.—well, well, what is this I see ? What do you say sir ? “ This gambler is being maltreated by the keeper of the gaming table and none does save him.” Well, Dardura himself will save him. ( Approaching. ) Stand back, stand back ! ( Beholding, ) What ! Here is the swindler Mathura ! Here again is the innocent Samvahaka ?

Why should a delicate fellow like this be always gambling ? ( he ) who does not remain hanging ( from a tree ) with his head bent till the end of the day without murmur, whose back does not bear the marks left by the stripes and bruises ; and the interior of whose legs is not bitten by the hounds daily. (12).

Well, I shall pacify Mathura. ( Approaching. ) Mathura, I salute unto thee.

( Mathura returns the greeting. )

Dar.—What does this mean ?

Math.—This man owes me ten suvarnas.

Dar.—This is a mere trifle, indeed !

Math.—( Pulling the rolled-up cloth from under Dardurak's arm. ) Look, gentleman, Look ! This man wrapped in a ragged cloak says that ten suvarnas are merely a trifle ( morning meal. )

Dar.—Why, you blockhead, surely I stake ten suvarnas on a cast of the dice. If a man has money, is that any reason why he should show it, clasping it to his bosom ?

You are cursed mean fellow, indeed, to kill a sentient human being, for the sake of ten suvarnas. (13)

Math.—To you, sir, ten suvarnas may be a mere trifle ; but to me, they are a fortune.

Dar.—Well then, listen to me. Just give him ten more suvarnas and let him play the game, again.

Math.—And what then ?

Dar.—If he wins, he shall pay you.

Math.—And if he does not win ?

Dar.—Then, he shall not pay you.

Math.—It is not proper to be prating about. If you say that, you can give the money yourself, My name is Mathura. I am a cheat and I can play a false game. I am not afraid of anybody.

Besides, you are a man of no character (an immoral blackguard.)

Dar.—Who, did you say was, a blackguard?

Math.—You are a blackguard.

Dar.—Your father is an immoral blackguard.

(Makes signs to Samvahaka to escape.)

Math.—You, son of a whore! That is just the way that you gamble.

Dar.—Is this the way that I gamble?

Math.—Aye, Samvahaka, pay me my ten suvarnas.

Samvahaka.—I shall pay you to-day. I shall pay it presently (Mathura drags him along.)

Dar.—Fool, you can maltreat him behind my back, but never in my presence.

(Mathura drags Samvahaka and gives him a blow on the nose. Samvahaka bleeds, faints and falls on the ground. Darduraka approaches and gets between them both. Mathura strikes Darduraka and Darduraka strikes doubly in turn.)

Math.—You, villain, you son of a slave! You shall suffer for this.

Dar.—You fool! Now when I was merely walking along the road, I have been assaulted by you. If to-morrow you beat me in court, you will then see.

Math.—Yes, yes, I shall see.

Dar.—How will you see?

Math.—(Opening his eyes wide.) It is in this way that I shall see.

[Darduraka fills Mathura's eyes with dust, and makes signs to Samvahaka to escape. Mathura shuts his eyes and falls down. Samvahaka escapes.]

Dar.—(Aside.) I have made an enemy of the influential gambling-master, Mathura. Is it not proper, therefore, for me to stay here. Besides, I have been told by my good friends Sarvilaka that a soothsayer has prophesied that a young herdsman, by name Aryaka, would be our future king. Now every one like myself is running after him. I shall also join him myself. (Exit.)

Sam.—(Walking frightfully and looking about.) Here is the house of somebody, the side-door of which is left open. I shall enter it. (Entering and beholding Vasantasena.) Madam, I throw myself upon your protection.

Vasantasena.—He who seeks refuge with me shall be safe. Madanika, close the door. (The maid does so.)

Vas.—Whom do you fear from?

Sam.—From a creditor, madam.

Vas.—Girl, open the door now.

Sam.—(To himself.) What! She makes light of my reasons for fearing a creditor. Rightly is it said thus:—

That man who, knowing his might, bears a weight proportioned to it, neither stumbles nor perishes in a dreary forest (14)

I serve as an example here.

Math.—( Wiping his eyes. To the gambler. ) Pay, Pay!

Gam.—Sir, while we were quarrelling with Darduraka, the man escaped.

Math.—I broke the gambler's nose with a blow of my fist. Come on! Let us track the path of the blood.

( Tracing it out )

Gam.—He has entered Vasantasena's house, sir.

Math.—The ten suvarnas are gone.

Gam.—Let us go to court and lodge a complaint.

Math.—In the meantime the swindler will come forth and shall escape. We shall hence seize him, by blocking up his passage.

( Vasantasena makes signs to Madanika. )

Madanika.—Whence are you, sir? Who are you, sir! What are you, sir? What is your profession, sir? What are you afraid of?

Sam.—Listen, madam. I was born, madam, at Pataliputra. I am the son of the head of the village. I follow the profession of a shampooer.

Vas.—Sir, it is, indeed, a very dainty art that you have mastered.

Sam.—Madam, I learnt it as an art. But now, it has become the means of getting my livelihood.

Mad.—Sir, your answers are most disconsolate. Pray continue.

Sam.—[ Having often listened to the travellers, when I was at home, I felt curious to see new countries and so I came here. When I came here to Ujjaini, I became the servant of a distinguished gentleman; such; a handsome ( of engaging figure ) and courteous gentleman! He does not boast of his giving; he forgets offence readily. To be brief, he is so courteous that he regards his own person as belonging to others, and he is ever compassionate to those who seek his protection. ]

Mad.—Who it is that so graces Ujjaini, having stolen the virtues of the beloved object of my mistress?

Vas.—Good, girl, good! I had the same thought in my mind.

Mad.—Pray continue sir.

Sam.—Madam, out of compassion, he was so bounteous that now—

Vas.—His wealth has vanished ?

Sam.—How did you know it, madam, without being told by me ?

Vas.—What was there to know ? Virtue and wealth rarely exist together. Those pools are full to the brim whose water is unfit for drinking.

Mad.—But, sir, what is his name ?

Sam.—Madam, who is there that does not know the name of this moon of the world ? He lives in the merchant's quarter. He, whose name is worthy of all honour, is known as Charudatta.

Vas.—(Joyfully rising from her seat.) Sir, this house is your own. Madanika, give him a seat and take this fan. The gentleman is fatigued.

(Madanika does accordingly.)

Sam.—(To himself.) What ! such respect done to me from the mere mention of Charudatta's name ! Most excellent, worthy Charudatta, most excellent ! You are the only man in the world who really lives. All others merely breathe. (Falling at Vasantasena's feet.) Enough, madam, enough. Pray be seated, madam.

Vas.—(Seating herself.) Sir, where is your creditor ?

Sam.—Good man's (real) wealth consists in kind deeds. Who is there that does not own transient riches (some day or other) ? He who does not know how to honour others knows not the significance of honour. (15)

Vas.—Proceed, sir.

Sam.—So, I was made by that gentleman a servant in his employ. When he was reduced to penury (lit. when nothing of his remained with him except his sterling virtue), I began to live by gambling, but, fate was cruel, and I lost ten suvarnas.

Math.—I am ruined ! I am robbed !

Sam.—Here are the gambling-master and the gambler, seeking for me. You have heard my story, madam ; what is next to be done rests with you.

Vas.—Madanika, the birds flutter about here and there if the tree is shaken in which they have built their nests. Go, girl and give the gambling-master and the gambler this bracelet, telling them that this very gentleman sends it (in payment).

(Removing the bracelet from her arm, she gives it to Madanika.)

Mad.—(Receiving.) As you, madam, command. [Exit.]

Math.—I am ruined ! I am robbed !

Mad.—These two here are looking up to the house, are deeply sighing, are closely conferring to each other, and are moreover fixing their gaze on the door. I conclude hence that these must be the gambling-master and the gambler. (Approaching.) I salute you, sir.

Math.—May happiness be yours.

Mad.—Sir, which of you two is the gambling-master ?

Math.—Who are you slender-waisted damsel, prating sweet words, with the red lower lip wounded in love's sports and casting side glances ? (16)

I am not in affluent circumstances. Go somewhere else.

Mad.—You are certainly no gambler, if you talk thus. Is there any one who owes you money ?

Math.—There is. He owes me ten svarnas. What of him ?

Mad.—On his behalf, my mistress sends you this bracelet ; nay, nay—he sends it himself.

Math.—(Receiving it joyfully.) Well, well tell that nobly born youth "Your promise (pledge) has been fulfilled. Please come, and seek delight in gambling, again."

[Exit Mathura and the gambler.]

Mad.—[Approaching Vasantasena.] Madam, the gambling-master and the gambler have gone away quite pleased.

Vas.—Go, sir, and relieve the anxiety of (comfort) your kinsfolk.

Sam.—Madam, if it is to be the case, allow me (or employ me) to teach (impart) this art to your maids.

Vas.—You should still serve him whom you served once and on whose account you mastered the art.

Sam.—(To himself.) A very pretty way to decline my services! (My request is declined by the worthy lady in a very clever way). How shall I requite her kindness ? (Aloud.) Madam, on account of this disgrace done to me by the gambler, I shall become a Buddhist monk. And so, treasure these words in your memory, madam, "he was a shampoer, then a gambler and at last became a Buddhist monk."

Vas.—Sir, enough of rashness (acting too precipitately).

Sam.—Madam, I have made up my mind. (Walking.) Gambling has brought me (done to me) to a state (i. e. of a Buddhist monk) in which no hand of man shall reach me (i. e. in which I shall not be persecuted as when I was a gambler). Now I can hold up my head boldly, and roam freely along the royal road. (17)

(A tumultuous noise behind the scenes.)

Sam.—(Listening.) What is this? (In the air.) What do you say? “खुण्डमोडक (Post-breaker), Vasantasena's wild elephant has broken loose!” Hey! I must go and see the furious elephant of the worthy lady. Or, rather, what have I to do with these things? I shall follow what I am determined upon.

(Then enter hastily, Karnapuraka, highly delighted, wearing a gorgeous mantle.)

Karnapuraka.—Where is my mistress? Where is my mistress?

Mad.—You, unmannerly fellow! What is that so excites you that you do not see your mistress that is seated before your very eyes?

Kar.—(Beholding Vasantasena.) Madam, salute you.

Vas.—Karnapuraka, your face is beaming with joy. What is it?

Kar.—(Astonishingly.) Madam, you have lost (a great deal), in that you have not witnessed to-day, the valorous achievement of Karnapuraka.

Vas.—Karnapuraka, what is it, what is it?

Kar.—Listen, madam. Your ladyship's wild elephant Khunta-modaka broke the post he was tied to, killed the head keeper, and then scoured off along the high road, creating a terrible commotion. The people shouted and screamed.

“Carry off the children, at once, and climb up a roof or a tree. Don't you see before you, the fierce elephant coming in this direction?” (18)

And:—

The pair of anklets (of the elephant) falls off; the girdles set with gems break away; and the beautiful bracelets studded with a network of spars of gems snap asunder. (19)

And then the fierce elephant plunged about in Ujjayini, with his trunk, his feet and his tusks, as if in a tank full of blooming lotuses. A Buddhist monk was seized; and while his staff and water-jar fell away, he drizzled water over him, and got him between his tusks. Seeing this, the people all cried out again, “Ah! Ah! The monk is killed!”

Vas.—(Highly excited.)—Alas! Alas!

Kar.—Don't be alarmed. Just listen, mistress. Then, seeing him with a big-piece of the broken chain dangling about him, and picking the monk between the tusks, I, Karnapuraka,—nay, nay, the slave grown fat on my ladyship's meals, having thundered aloud or shouted to the gambler (now turned a mendicant) to cheer up, ran in a zigzag way and snatched up quickly an iron bar out of a shop, and challenged elephant (to a halt.)

Vas.—Go on! Go on!

Kar.—I dealt a fierce blow at the furious elephant who looked like the summit of the mount Meru, and released the monk held between his tusks. (20)

Vas.—You have done well. Proceed.

Kar.—Then, mistress, all Ujjayini crowded over on one side, like a ship loaded unevenly, merely shouting out "Well done, Karnapuraka, well done!" But, madam, one person there was, who, having touched the places where he ought to have ornaments, and finding that he hadn't any, looked up, heaved a long sigh and threw this mantle over me.

Vas.—Find out, Karnapuraka, if the garment smells of jasmynes or not.

Kar.—Madam, the smell of the elephant's rut is so strong that I can't tell for sure.

Vas.—Then look at the name.

Kar.—Here is the name. Madam, you may read it yourself.
(Hands her the garment.)

Vas.—(Reads.) Charudatta! (Having read thus, she seizes the mantle eagerly and wraps it about her.)

Mad.—Karnapuraka, the mantle becomes our mistress very well.

Kar.—Oh, yes, our mistress shines splendidly with the mantle.

Vas.—Karnapuraka, here is your reward. (Gives him an ornament.)

Kar.—(Receiving it humbly and bowing low.) Now, indeed, the mantle is most wonderfully becoming about our mistress.

Vas.—Karnapuraka, where is Charudatta now?

Kar.—He started to go home along this very road.

Vas.—Come, girl! Let us ascend to the upper balcony and have a view of Charudatta.

(Exeunt omnes.)

ACT III.

—:O:—

[ Then enter Charudatta's servant, Vardhamanaka. ]

Servant.—A good master who is kind-hearted towards his servants, is pleasing (shines) even though he be poor. On the other hand, a malignant master who is vain of his riches is hard to please and is ultimately cruel. (1)

And again:—

A bull that is greedy of a feast of corn can't be restrained (out of a field), nor can a wife be prevented who is fond of another. A man who is excessively fond of gambling can't be kept away from it; so also, it is impossible to remedy an innate defect. (2)

It is a long time since my master Charudatta went out to hear music. It is past midnight, and he has not returned yet. I shall therefore take a nap in the hall near the outer door.

[ He does so. ]

( Enter Charudatta and Vidushaka. )

Charudatta.—Excellent! Excellent! How exquisitely Rebhila sang! The Vina is indeed a gem, without being born of the ocean.

It is an agreeable companion to the heart of one who is longing for his beloved; it is a noble amusement when the lover who has made his appointment, tarries; it is the most agreeable remedy (means of) to compose those who are pining away from the separation of their beloved; and moreover, it is a delight that enhances the passion of the lover. (3)

Vid.—Come, sir; let us go home.

Cha.—Aye, how wonderfully our learned Rebhila sang!

Vid.—But to me, there are two things at which I cannot choose but laugh;—a woman reading Sanskrit, and a man singing in a soft and low tone. Now, when a female reads Sanskrit, she repeatedly snuffles (lit. makes a 'soo soo' sound) like an young cow which has a rope newly passed through its nostrils. And, a man, singing soft and low, is like a priest, dressed in dried up flower-garlands, and softly muttering sacred texts. No, I don't like it at all!

Cha.—My friend, Master Rebhila sang most wonderfully to-night. And still you are not satisfied.

Lovely, sweet, smooth and clear, emotional, graceful and charming—Such was his music. What if I spoke my numerous.

words of praise? I believe that there was a female covertly stationed in him. (4)

And again :—

As I walk on I seem to hear the sweet cadence still, even when the music has died, the sweet notes of the lute, blended in harmony, making different मूर्च्छनाs even on syllables ('now gently undulating'), now swelling high, now dying to a close (lit. soft at pause), easily controlled (from straying into a false note) and 'repeated with a passionate enthusiasm'. (5)

Vid.—O, friend! Even the dogs in the high road through the market place are fast asleep; let us go home. (Looking before him.) Friend, look, look! The moon descends from her mansion in the skies, as if making room for darkness.

Cha.—Most truly.

The moon, making room for darkness, hastens to her setting with her digits uplifted, resembling thereby the (curved) end of the tusk of a forest elephant, which is left (visible over the waters) when the elephant is plunged into water. (6)

Vid.—Sir, here is our house. Vardhamanaka, Vardhamanaka, open the door!

Vardhamanaka.—The worthy Maitreya's voice is heard. Charudatta has returned. I shall, therefore, open the door for him. (He does so.) Master, I bow unto you Maitreya, I salute you too. Pray, let you, worthy sirs, seat yourself on the seats that are ready spread. (Both enter and seat themselves.)

Vid.—Vardhamanaka, call Radanika to wash our feet.

Cha.—(Compassionately.) Nay, do not wake her who is fast asleep.

Vardh.—I shall hold the water, while you, worthy Maitreya, may wash his feet.

Vid.—(Angrily.) Oh, friend, (look at this). This son of a slave is to hold the water, while he sets me, who am a Brahman, to wash the feet.

Cha.—Friend Maitreya, pour out the water. (Vidushaka does accordingly. Vardhamanaka washes Charudatta's feet, and then moves away.)

Cha.—Let water be poured to wash the Brahman's feet.

Vid.—What good does water do my feet? I shall have to roll on the ground again, like a beaten ass.

Vardh.—Worthy Maitreya, you are a Brahmin!

M. 5-6.

Vid.—Like  amongst all serpents, so am I a Brahman amongst all Brahmans.

Vardh.—Worthy Maitreya, however I shall wash your feet. (He does so.) Maitreya, this golden casket I was to keep by day, you by night. Therefore, take it.

(He gives it to Maitreya; then exit.)

Vid.—(Receiving the casket.) The thing is here even to this day. Isn't there a single thief even in Ujjayini, to steal this wretch that robs me of my sleep? Friend, I shall lay it in the inner courtyard.

Cha.—Don't lay in the inner courtyard, in as much as it is worn by a courtesan; therefore, O Brahman, keep it with your self, till it is restored to her. (7.)

(He acts as if sleeping and again repeats "As I walk on &c.")

Vid.—Sir, are you going to sleep?

Cha.—Yes,

The sleep, descending on my eyes, approaches me (creeps upon) as if from the regions of my forehead. Unseen, and elusive like old age, she increases in strength overwhelming the energy of man. (8.)

Vid.—Then let us go to sleep. (He acts as if sleeping.)

(Then enter Sarvilaka.)

Sarvilaka.—Having effected with the aid of my training and strength a passage which is the road unto my action, and which is such as would easily admit the circumference of my body I, with my sides scratched on account of creeping, on the ground, move like a serpent with a worn out body and escaping (from some obstacle.)

(Gazing at the sky joyfully.) See! The moon is setting. For well I know.

Like a (careful) mother (whose pupil of the eye is darkened by the disease of cataract,) the night, whose stars are hidden amidst the thick mass of darkness, shields me, valiant and solely determined as I am, on spoiling the dwellings of others, and who am walking about in apprehension of the royal watchmen. (10.)

Having made a breach in the (walled) boundary of the garden, I have got into the midst of the garden. And, now I shall force my way into the inner courtyard as well.

Yes, men may speak of this (thieving) as ignoble, in as much as it succeeds most when men are overcome with sleep. It is sheer knavery and no bravery to cheat those who lie confidently abed; it is an insult worthy of contempt. But yet, a position, that is after all independent, though condemnable indeed is certainly far better than servile homage. And, moreover, this very course was adopted formerly by Drona's son in his nocturnal onset on the (Pandava) kings. (11)

But, then, where shall I make the breach ?

What part (of the wall) is it that is loosened on account of (constant) sprinkling of water, and wherein there may be no noise (made by the falling fragments of bricks)? Where is there a yawning breach practicable, which will not be (afterwards) visible on the walls? What part of the mansion is likely to be dilapidated, have few bricks, corroded by saltpetre? Where can I penetrate in order that I may accomplish my purpose, without encountering the female sex? (12)

(Feeling the wall.) Here is a spot that is weakened by continual sprinkling with water and exposure to the sun; and it is moreover, corroded on account of saltpetre. Oh, the purpose is evidently accomplished! This is the first omen of success for the sons of Skandha. Now, first of all, what kind of hole shall I make? The worthy Bearer of the Golden Lance (Skanda) has, in this connection, prescribed four modes of effecting a breach; thus:—pulling out the bricks if they are baked, cutting through them if unbaked, throwing water on them if they are made of earth and splitting those of wood. Here we have baked bricks which must be pulled out.

The breach, may be like a fully-bloomed lotus, or like the full sun or like the crescent moon or like a lake, or oblong, or like a स्वस्तिक (cross), or like a water-jar. In what portion of the wall, am I to display my skill, seeing which the citizens shall be astonished to-morrow? (13)

In this wall of baked bricks, a water-jar alone looks best. So I will make that.

In connection with my irregular creations (i. e. shapes of breach) in other walls corroded by salt-petre, which have been breached by me in the course of this night, the neighbours seeing them in the morning, will find fault with my work in some and at the same time speak well of my dexterity in others (14)

Bow to the boon-conferring god, Kartikeya of immortal youth! Praise to him, the Bearer of the Golden lance, the god who is ever kind to Brahmans and whose law is divine! Praise to Bhaskaranandi Reverence to Yogacharya, whose foremost pupil I am! For, being pleased with me, he blessed me with the magic ointment.

When I am besmeared with it, none among the watchmen can behold me; nor can any weapon thrown on my body produce any weapon thrown on my body produce any pain to me. (15)

(He anoints himself.) Alas, I have forgotten my measuring-line. (Reflecting.) Aha! This sacred thread shall be my measuring line. Yes, the sacred thread is a most useful material to a Brahman, and especially to one like me. For.

It serves him to measure the breach in the walls, and to disentangle ornaments from their fastenings. It serves to him the purpose of a key, when a door is strongly secured by bolt; and it serves him, also, the purpose of a tourniquet when he is bitten by reptiles or serpents. (16)

Having finished the measuring, I shall begin my task (of making the breach.) (He does so, and then takes a look.) This breach wants but (the removing of) a single brick. Alas, I am bitten by a snake. (He binds his finger with the sacred thread, and manifests the effect of poison: applying remedy.) Now, I am alright. (Continuing the work and beholding.) Ah! There burns a lamp! See!

Even though hemmed in by darkness, the golden-yellow flame of the lamp, streaming through the breach, shines upon the ground like a streak of gold placed on a touchstone. (17)

(Returning to his work.) The breach is accomplished. Very well, I shall enter. Or rather, I shall not enter so soon. I shall first shove in a dummy. (He does so.) Ah, no one is here. Bow to Skandha! (He enters and looks about.) Ah! Here are two men asleep. For my own protection let me set the door open. Why, the house is old and the door squeaks. I must look for water. Now where might water be? (He looks about, finds water and sprinkles. Anxiously.) I hope it will not patter upon the floor and make a noise. Well, this is how to do it. (He puts his back against the door and opens it.) Good! So much for that. Now I must discover whether these two are feigning sleep, or whether they are really asleep. (He tries to terrify them, and notes the effect.)

Yes, they are indeed fast asleep. For see!

The breathing is free, very distinct, and regular; the eyes are closed tightly, are unmoving within their socket holes and do not seem to wink; the limbs are relaxed, the joints of the body being loosened are extended beyond the dimensions of the bed. If they are feigning sleep, surely they will not bear the gleam of the lamp upon their faces. (18)

( He looks about him ) What ! a drum ? and here is a flute. And here a tabor, and here a lute ; and reed-pipes. And yonder manuscripts. Is this the house of a dancing-master ? But no ! Or have I entered out of faith in the appearance of the mansion ? Now then, is this man really poor, or from the fear of the king or of thieves does he keep his money buried underground. Well, can any treasure be hidden from me, from Sarvilaka ? But I will scatter the seeds that betray sub-terranean gold. ( He does so. ) The scattered seeds nowhere expand (multiply.) Ah, he is really poor ! Good ! I go.

Vid.—( Talking in his sleep. ) O. friend, I see something like a hole in the wall. I see something like a thief. You had better take this golden casket.

Sarvilaka—I wonder if the man has discovered that I have entered, and is showing off his poverty in order to make fun of me. Shall I kill him, or is his talking in his sleep being a weak-minded little man ? ( He takes a look. ) But see ! This thing wrapped in a ragged bathing-garment, now that I inspect it by the light of my lamp, is in truth a jewel-casket. Well I shall take it. But no ! It is hardly proper to rob a man of good birth who is as poor as I am, I go.

Vid.—My friend, I conjure thee by the wishes of cows and Brahmans to take this golden casket,

Sarvilaka—One cannot disregard the sacred wish of a cow and the wish of a Brahman. I will take it. But look ! There burns the lamp. I keep about me a moth for the express purpose of extinguishing lamps. I will let him enter the flame. This is the place and hour to make use of it. May this moth which I here release, depart to flutter above the flame in varying circles. Bhadrapiṭha has put out the lamp by the breeze from its wings and has made accursed darkness. Or shall I not rather curse the darkness brought by me upon my Brahmanic family ? For my father was a man who knew the four Vedas, and who would not accept a gift ; and I, Sarvilaka, his son, and a Brahman, I am committing a crime for the sake of that courtesan girl Madanika. Now I will grant the Brahman's wish. ( He reaches out for the casket. )

Vid.—How cold your fingers are, friend !

Sarvilaka.—What carelessness ! My fingers are cold from touching water ; well, I will put my hand in my armpit. ( He warms his left hand and takes the casket. )

Vid.—Have you got it ?

Sarvilaka.—I could not refuse a Brahman's request ; I have it.

Vid.—Now I shall sleep as peacefully as a merchant who has sold his wares.

Sarvilaka.—O great Brahman, sleep a hundred years. Alas I have plunged in darkness a Brahman family for the sake of Madanika, a courtesan ! Or better, I have thus plunged my own soul in darkness.

Fie upon this poverty when one forgets one's manly virtues ; for here I do a shameful act, although condemning it at the same time ! (19)

Well then, I must go to Vasantasena's house to buy Madanika's freedom. (He walks about and looks around him). Ah, I think I hear footsteps. I hope they are not those of a policeman. Never mind, I shall stand still like a post. But after all am I, Sarvilaka, to be in dread of the policemen ? Why, I am

A cat in climbing, a deer in running, a hawk in holding in clutches and tearing to pieces, a dog in gauging the strength of those that are asleep and those that are wide awake, a snake in creeping ; in assuming various forms, I am Maya herself, the Goddess of Speech incarnate in the use of different languages, a lamp in the night, a lizard in holes, a horse on land and a boat on the water. (20)

And again,

I am a serpent in motion, a mountain in steadiness, and can match Garuda (lit, lord of birds) in constantly flying about, I am a hare in kenning the world, wolf in seizing and a lion in strength of body. (21)

Radanika.—(Entering.) Dear me ! Vardhamanaka went to sleep in the outer court, and now he is not there. Well, I will call Maitreya. (She walks about).

Sarvilaka.—(Prepares to strike down Radanika, but first takes a look.) What ; a woman ? good ; I go. [Exit]

Radanika. (Recoiling in terror.) O, Oh, a thief has cut a hole in the wall of our house and is escaping. I must go and wake Maitreya. (She approaches Maitreya.) Oh, Maitreya, get up ; get up ! a thief has cut a hole in the wall of our house and has escaped.

Vid.—(rising.) What do you mean ? "A hole in the wall has cut a thief and has escaped ?"

Radanika.—Poor fool ! Stop your joking. Don't you see it ?

Vid.—What do you mean ? It looks as if a second door has been thrown open ? Get up, friend Charudatta, get up ! A thief has made a hole in the wall of our house and has escaped.

Charu.—Yes, Yes ! A truce to your jests.

Vidu.—But it is not jest. Look !

Charu.—Where ?

Vidu.—Why ; here.

Charu.—(Gazing.) What, a very remarkable hole ! The bricks are thrown down from above ; it is narrow at the top and expanded in the middle. It appears that the heart of the mansion has burst through the dread of the contact with an unworthy person. (22)

Why even in such a task there is a skill !

Vid.—My friend ! This hole must have been made by one of two men ; either by a stranger, or else for practice by a student of science of robbery. For, what man here in Ujjayini does not know the wealth of our house ?

Charu.—

This breach in the wall must have been surely made by a stranger who was practising his art—he did not know that only impoverished persons sleep soundly. He entered full of hope, seeing before him this huge pile of ours (large mansion), but must have gone quite disappointed being merely fatigued by the trouble he took in effecting the breach in the wall. (23)

What will the poor fellow have to tell his comrades ?

"I entered the house of a merchant's son and found—nothing."

Vid.—Do you really feel sorry for the rascally robber ? He must have thought—"Here's a great house. Here's the place to carry off a jewel casket or a gold casket." (He remembers the casket. Despondently, aside.) Where is that golden casket ? (He remembers the events of the night. Aloud.) Look, friend, you are always saying "Maitreya is a fool, Maitreya is a blockhead." But I certainly acted wisely in handing over that golden casket to you. If I had not, the son of a slave could have carried it off.

Charu.—Come, come, enough of this jesting.

Vid.—Just because I am a fool, do you suppose I don't even know the place and time for a jest ?

Cha.—But when did this happen ?

Vid.—Why, when I told you that your fingers were cold.

Cha.—It might have been. (He searches about. Joyfully.)

My friend, I have something pleasant to tell you.

Vid.—What ? Was it not stolen ?

Cha.—Yes.

Vid.—What is the pleasant news then ?

Cha.—The fact that he did not go disappointed.

Vid.—But it was merely a trust.

Cha.—What? A trust! (He swoons.)

Vid.—Come to yourself, friend. If a thief stole what was entrusted to you, why should you swoon?

Cha.—(Coming to himself.) Ah, my friend, who will believe in the fact (i. e. that it was stolen)? Every one will slight me. Indeed, abject poverty affords ground for suspicion in this world. (24)

Alas!

If fate had already all my wealth, why should that ruthless fate tarnish my fair name now? (25)

Vid.—I shall deny the whole thing. Who gave anybody anything? Who received anything from anybody? Who was a witness?

Cha.—And shall I tell a falsehood now?

I would rather beg and earn money enough to repay the price of the deposit; on no account I shall speak a falsehood and soil my name. (26)

Radanika.—I will go and inform Dhuta of all this. (She goes out, returning with Charudatta's wife.)

Dhuta.—(Anxiously.) Oh, it is true that my lord is uninjured, and Maitreya too?

Radanika.—It is true, mistress. But the gems which belong to the courtesan have been stolen. (Charudatta's wife swoons.) Oh my good mistress, come to yourself.

Dhuta.—(Recovering.) Girl, how do you say that my lord is uninjured? Better he were injured in body than in character. For now the people of Ujjayini will say that my lord committed this crime because of his poverty. (She looks up and sighs.) Ah mighty Fate! Thou dost play with the destinies of the poor, uncertain as the water-drops which fall upon a lotus-leaf. There remains to me this one necklace, which I brought with me from my mother's house. But my lord would be too proud to accept it. Girl, call Maitreya hither.

Radanika.—Yes mistress. (She approaches Maitreya.) Maitreya, my lady summons you.

Vid.—Where is she?

Radanika.—Here. Come!

Vid.—(Approaching.) Heaven bless you!

Dhuta.—I salute you. Sir, Sir, will you look straight in front of you?

Maitreya.—Madam ! Here I stand as you desire.

Dhuta.—Sir, you must accept this.

Maitreya.—What do you mean ?

Dhuta.—I have fasted on the रत्नषष्ठी day and therefore must make a present to a Brahman, as rich as I can. This I have not done; therefore pray accept this necklace on the account of such a Brahman.

Maitreya.—( Receiving the necklace ) Heaven bless you ! I shall go and tell my friend.

Dhuta.—You must however, so manage it that I might not be put to shame.

[ Exit. ]

Vid.—( In astonishment. ) What a loftiness of mind ?

Charu.—How, Maitreya lingers ! I trust, in his distress, he would not do what he ought not, Maitreya, Maitreya !

Vid.—( Approaching. ) Here I am. Take that. ( He displays the necklace. )

Charu.—What is this ?

Vid.—Why, that is the reward you get for marrying a worthy wife.

Charu.—What ! My wife takes pity on me ? Alas ! Now am I poor indeed.

My wealth having disappeared through my adverse fate, I am now pitied by my wife through the offer of her money; thus from the monetary point of view, the woman (i. e. his wife) has become the man (i. e. himself) and the man, the woman ( 27 )

But no, I am not poor. For,

I have a wife who follows me in all the vicissitudes of my fortune and a ( true ) friend, who is same all through my prosperity and adversity (joys and sorrows); I have not moreover lost my sterling honesty, which is impossible to find among the poor ( 28 )

Maitreya take the necklace and go to Vasantsena. Tell her in my name that we have gambled away the golden casket forgetting that it was not our own ( or thinking that it was our own ), and that we trust she will accept this necklace in its place.

Vid.—But you must not give away this necklace, the pride of the four seas, for that trifle that was stolen before we had a bite or a drink out of it.

Charu.—Not so, my friend.

We give here but the price of the great faith with which she trusted those ornaments to us in all confidence (and not of those ornaments. (29)

Friend, I conjure you by the embrace of my body not to return until you have delivered it into her hands. Vardhamanaka.

Quickly fill up this opening with the selfsame bricks ; I cannot help concealing it for evils of idle censure. (30)

Friend Maitreya, you must so speak to her as to show the loftiness of spirit of a noble minded-person.

Vid.—What for will a pauper be niggard in his speech ? (i. e. he can well afford to be very liberal in his speech ).

Charu.—Poor I am not, my friend. For, I have a wife &c. ( see Verse 28. )

Go then, and after performing morning ablutions I will offer (morning) prayers.

[ Exeunt Omnes. ]

---

ACT IV.

—:o:—

(Enter a Maid.)

Maid.—I am sent (with a message) to my mistress by her mother. She is gazing at a picture (lit. picture-board) and is talking with Madanika; I will go to her. (She walks about.)

[Then enter Vasantasena as described, and also Madanika.]

Vasantasena.—Madanika, is this portrait a good likeness of Charudatta?

Madanika.—A very (good) real one, indeed!

Vas.—How do you know?

Mad.—Because the looks of my mistress are cast (bestowed) so lovingly over it.

Vas.—Do you say this, Madanika, in the way of courtesan courtesy?

Mad.—Madam, because one leads the profession of a courtesan, is that any reason why she must be falsely courteous?

Vas.—Girl, courtezans meet so many kinds of men, that they become falsely courteous to all.

Mad.—But, madam, when your eyes and your heart too, find such delight in (are intent upon) this portrait, what need is there to ask the reason?

Vas.—But, I protect myself, girl, from the ridicule of my friends (or I should not like to have my friends laugh at me.)

Mad.—Nay, not so, madam. A woman is ever secure of the sympathy of her companions.

First Maid.—(Approaching.) Madam, your mother sends word that a covered chariot is waiting at the side-door, and that you are to take a drive.

Vas.—Girl, is it the worthy Charudatta that invites me?

Maid.—Madam, the man who sent ornaments worth ten thousand suvarnas, along with the chariot,——

Vas.—Who is he?

Maid.—He is none other than Samsthanaka, the king's brother-in-law.

Vas.—(Indignantly.) Begone! Never talk again in this way.

Maid.—Be pacified, madam be pacified. I but deliver the message.

Vas.—But I am offended only with the message.

Maid.—What reply shall I convey to your mother ?

Vas.—Tell my mother that if she desires me to live, she shall no more send such messages.

Maid.—As you please.

[Exit.]

(Enter Sarvilaka.)

Sarvilaka.—I cast my censurable guilt upon the night; I triumphed over sleep, and the watchmen of the king. But now at the close of night, I have become devoid of lustre like the moon before the rising sun. (1)

And again :

If ever any one (with rapid strides) casts a passing look at me excited as I am, or nears me suddenly while I am standing, my guilty conscience suspects him and each and everyone, for man is ever frightened by his own crimes. (2)

Indeed, it was for Madanika's sake, that I did this daring sin.

I here let go the man who was busily engaged in talking to his servant; there I avoided the house when I found that it was ruled by women-folk; at one place I stood still like a pillar of the house while the police force passed near me; and with a hundred such manœuvres did I turn the night into a day. (3)

[He walks about.]

Vas.—Girl, just lay this picture on my sofa and soon come back with a fan.

Maid.—Yes, madam.

(Exit with the picture.)

Sar.—This is Vasantasena's dwelling. I shall enter (Entering.) Where can I find Madanika ?

(Then enter Madanika with a fan in her hand.)

Sar.—(Seeing her.) Ah, it is Madanika !

Surpassing even the god of love in her accomplishments, she shines, as if she is Rati herself in human guise; and brings a coolness of sandal to my heart that burns with the fire of love. (4)

O ! Madanika !

Mad.—(Seeing him.) Eh ! Sarvilaka. ! Welcome to you. Sarvilaka. ! Where have you been till now ?

Sar.—I will tell you. (They gaze at each other passionately.)

Vas.—Madanika lingers long. Where can she be ? (She looks through the window.) What ! There she stands conversing with a man. Her loving glances are intently fixed on him and she gazes as if she would drink him in. I imagine, therefore, that he must be the man who desires to make her free. Well, let her enjoy. Let not any body's happiness be interrupted. I shall not call her.

Mad.—Sarvilaka, tell me.

(Sarvilaka looks about him anxiously.)

Mad.—What is it, Sarvilaka? You seem very uneasy,

Sar.—I will tell you a secret. Are we alone?

Mad.—Of course, we are,

Vas.—What! a deep secret! I shall not then listen,

Sar.—Madanika, will Vasantasena set you free, after taking a price?

Vas.—What! the conversation is something concerning me. Then I will hide myself behind this window, and overhear it unobserved.

Mad.—I spoke to my mistress about it, Sarvilaka, and she said that if she could have her own way, she would free all her servants for nothing. But, Sarvilaka, where can you find such a fortune that you may therewith purchase my freedom from my mistress?

Sar.—Afflicted by poverty and prompted by love for you, O timid lady, I committed last night a daring act on your account. (5)

Vas.—His face is tranquil. But it is capable of being fearful, if he commit a sinful deed.

Mad.—O! Sarvilaka! For the sake of a trifling thing, as the woman, you have risked both the things!

Sar.—What are they? What are they?

Mad.—Your life and your character.

Sar.—Foolish lady, fortune ever attends an adventurous deed. (Fortune favours the brave.)

Mad.—Sarvilaka, your character is without a stain? You haven't done anything very bad when for my sake you did the adventurous act?

Sar.—I do not plunder any lady who with her ornaments appears like a blossomed creeper; I do not rob the Brahman of his riches, nor steal the gold collected for sacrificial purposes. For the sake of wealth, I have never borne off a babe, while in the lap of its nurse. And my wisdom, even when used in robbery, is ever discriminating between the right and the wrong. (6)

And so you tell Vasantasena:—

'Let this ornament which is, as it were, made to suit your body, be worn by you out of affection for me, without being observed by others.'

Mad.—But, Sarvilaka, an ornament that nobody may see and a courtesan, these two things are inconsistent with each other. Therefore show it to me. Let me see it.

Sar.—Here it is. (He gives it to her with much uneasiness).

Mad.—(Observing it.) Indeed, I have seen these ornaments before. Tell me. Where did you get this?

Sar.—What does that concern you, Madanika? Take it.

Mad.—(Angrily.) If you have no confidence in me, then, why do you buy my freedom?

Sar.—Well, this morning I learnt in the merchants' quarter that the merchant Charudatta.—

(Both Vasantasena and Madanika swoon.)

Sar.—Revive, Madanika!

Why it is that now your limbs are loosely hanging down in despair and your eyes are rolling in excitement? Why do you tremble, and don't pity me when I am, come to make you free? (8)

Mad.—(Regaining her senses.) O! You reckless man, when you did for my sake what you ought not to have done, you didn't kill or hurt anybody in the mansion?

Sar.—Madanika, Sarvilaka never strikes one who is terrified nor any who is asleep. Hence I did not kill anybody nor hurt anybody.

Mad.—Truly?

Sar.—Most truly.

Vas.—(Regaining consciousness.) Ah! I am brought to life again. (I breathe again!)

Mad.—This is indeed a blessing!

Sar.—(Jealously.) What does this 'प्रियम्' mean, Madanika?

Even though born of a family the forerunners of which were highly righteous in their conduct, I commit sinful deeds, because my heart is bound in love with you. If my virtues are killed out of me by Cupid, nevertheless do I preserve my sense of honour. And you call me your friend and yet go after (care for) another. (9)

(Significantly.)

Here in this world, the goodly trees in the form of nobly born youths, whose fruit consists of wealth, are rendered totally bare of their fruits, having fallen a prey to the harlot birds (birdlike harlots.) (10)

Love is, indeed, a fire, whose flame is amorous sport, which is fed by the fuel of lust, and wherein the youth and wealth of men are being sacrificed. (11)

Vas.—( With a smile. ). Ah ! His excitement is, indeed, out of place !

Sar.—Yes !

Those men are fools, it seems to me, who trust to women or to riches. For, riches, and women only dishonour those who love them. One should love a woman only when she loves of her own accord, and must discard her, when she is devoid of love. (12)

Truly it is said :—

Courtezans laugh or weep for the sake of wealth ; they gain the confidence of others, but never confide in them ; therefore, a man of birth and character should ever abandon them like flowers in a grave yard. (13)

And again :—

Their disposition is ever changing as the waves of the sea ; like the twilight cloud, their रक्त ( love and redness ) is of short duration. Women rob men of their wealth, and abandon them, when they are penniless, like squeezed piece of red lac. (14)

Yes, women are indeed, fickle.

They fix their heart on one, but invite another by glances. They pour their effusion of joy on one, but sport bodily with another. (15)

Some one has, indeed, well said.—

On mountain-tops, no lotuses are grown ; nor will asses ever bear the horse's yoke ; scattered grains of barley do not grow into rice, nor are the courtezans, ladies ever pure and faithful. (16)

Ah ! Accursed Charudatta, you shall no longer live !

( He walks a few steps )

Mad.—( Seizing him by the hem of his garment ). You are talking mere nonsense, and your anger is ridiculously out of place.

Sar.—Out of place ? How so ?

Mad.—This ornament belongs verily to my mistress.

Sar.—And what then ?

Mad.—And she deposited it in the hand of that gentleman.

Sar.—What for ?

Mad.—( Whispering. ) That is why.

Sar.—( With embarrassment. ) Alas !

Unconsciously have I deprived of its foliage that very branch, to which being heated with the sun, I resorted for shade. (17)

Vas.—What ! He too feels very sorry. Surely he did this thing in ignorance.

Sar.—Madanika, what is to be done now ?

Mad.—You are yourself the best judge in the matter,

Sar.—Nay, not so. See.

Women as a whole are wise by nature; while wisdom is acquired by men only by the study of Shastras. (18)

Mad.—Sarvilaka, if you will take my advice, then restore the ornament to that righteous gentleman.

Sar.—Madanika, if he should inform of me to the king's officers? (Or if he should prosecute me?)

Mad.—But heat shall not come from the moon.

Vas.—Well said, Madanika! Well said!

Sar.—

I feel no grief nor fear for this venturesome act that I have done. What for do you mention to me the virtues of that noble gentleman? Does this mean act generate in me any feeling of shame? Or what can the king here do to such rogues as I? (19)

Nevertheless, your suggestion is inconsistent with prudence. Let some other plan be thought out.

Mad.—This is another plan.

Vas.—What can this other plan possibly be?

Mad.—Under the guise of being an attendant of the gentleman, place the ornament in the hands of my mistress.

Sar.—And what then?

Mad.—Then you are no thief, the worthy Charudatta becomes discharged of his obligation, and my mistress has got her ornaments.

Sar.—But isn't this course very risky?

Mad.—I tell you, give it to her. Any other course is only still more risky.

Vas.—Good, madam, good! You have spoken like a free woman.

Sar.—Having followed you, I have gained profound wisdom. When there is no moon in the night, it is hard to find a guide. (20)

Mad.—Then you shall wait here a moment in the temple of Kamadeva, while I inform my mistress of your arrival.

Sar.—Let it be so,

Mad.—(Approaching Vasantasena) Mistress, here is come a Brahman from Charudatta.

Vas.—Girl, how do you know that he is associated with Charudatta?

Mad.—Madam, else I don't know even anything that is associated with myself.

Vas.—(Shaking her head and smiling. Aside.) Quite proper to say so ! (Aloud.) Let him enter.

Mad.—As my mistress commands. (Approaching Sarvilaka.) Enter, Sarvilaka.

Sar.—(Approaches with some embarrassment.) My greetings to you, madam.

Vas.—I salute you, sir. Pray, be seated.

Sar.—The merchant communicates to you: "On account of the dilapidated condition of my house, it is hard to keep this casket safe. So please receive it back." (He gives it to Madanika and starts to go.)

Vas.—Sir, please take to the gentleman my return message.

Sar.—(To himself) Who will go there ? (Aloud.) What is that message ?

Vas.—Sir, please take Madanika in return.

Sar.—Madam, I don't quite understand you.

Vas.—But I do understand it.

Sir.—How so ?

Vas.—I have been told by the noble Charudatta that I am to give Madanika to the gentleman who hands over this ornament to me. Sir, you are therefore to understand that it is he, Charudatta, that hands her over to you.

Sar.—(To himself.) Ah ! She has found me out. (Aloud) Good, noble Charudatta, good !

Indeed, man must ever strive after virtues ; for a man who is devoid of virtue, however rich he may be, can never equal one who, though poor, is possessed of great virtue. (22)

And again.

Man must ever endeavour to acquire virtues, for there is nothing that is unattainable by virtues. It is on account of the excellence of virtues that the moon secured a seat on Siva's head which is, otherwise, unattainable. (23)

Vas.—Is my charioteer here ?

(Then enter a servant with a chariot ).

Servant—Mistress, the chariot is ready.

Vas.—Girl Madanika, please look at me well. You are free. Enter the chariot. Please remember me.

Mad.—(Weeping) I have been abandoned by my mistress.

(She falls at her feet.)

Vas.—Now it is you that is to be revered by me. Go then. Enter the chariot. Do not forget me.

Sar.—Heaven bless you madam ! Madanika ?

Survey with grateful look this personage and salute her with bended head ; for because of her, you attained the otherwise unattainable veil that is characteristic of the name of a bride. (24)

He ascends the chariot with Madanika and begins to depart

( A voice behind the scenes )

Who is there ? Who is there ? The Governor orders ! “The King Palaka, being alarmed, out of belief in the saying of the soothsayers that a young herdsman Aryaka shall be the future king, has brought him from his hamlet and has confined him in jail. Therefore every one of you must be watchful at your respective stations.

Sar.—( Listening ) What ! King Palaka has imprisoned my good friend Aryaka ? And, here I have become a married man. Alas ! Or rather.

Two things alone are most dear to all men in this world,—a friend and a wife ; but under these circumstances, it is a friend that is superior to hundreds of beautiful wives. (25)

Very well, I shall get down. ( He descends. )

Mad.—( Shedding tears and folding her hands. ) This won't do. My lord, you must at least lead me to the elders of your family.

Sar.—Yes, my beloved. You tell me just the thing that I have in my mind. ( To the servant. ) My good fellow, do you know the house of the merchant Rebhila ?

Servant.—Yes.

Sar.—Lead my wife thither.

Mad.—So shall it be, as my lord directs. But my lord, you must be very careful. ( Exit. )

Sar.—Like Yaugandharayana for the release of the king Udayana, shall I rouse for the release of my friend, the kinsmen, the rogues, those that have won distinction for the strength of their arms, and those royal servants that are disaffected on account of the insolence of the king. (26)

And again :—

My dear friend has been unreasonably confined by wicked foes with (because of) imaginary apprehensions of their own ; and I shall go myself and release him quickly, who is, as it were the moon that has fallen into the jaws of Rahu. (27) [ Exit. ]

Maid.—(Entering.) Madam, fortunate you are ! A Brahman has come from the revered Charudatta.

Vas.—Ah ! This is a very happy day. Girl, conduct him hither respectfully, attended by one of the bastard-pages.

Maid.—Yes, mistress. [Exit]

[Enter Vidushaka with a bastard page.]

Vid.—Aye ! Ravana, the king of the Rakshasas moves in the Pushpaka car that has been won by him through his rigorous penances. But now, I, a Brahman move about with a retinue of men and women, though I never took the trouble of performing any penance.

Maid.—Sir, please have a look at the gateway of our residence.

Vid.—(Gazing with admiration.) Oh the charming appearance of the outer entrance of the palace of Vasantasena ! It has just been sprinkled with water and cleaned, and then besmeared with green cow-dung. Its floor is decorated with offerings of all sorts of fragrant flowers. It stretches up its head very high, as if desirous of peeping into the sky, It is adorned with strings of jasmine garlands that loosely hang down, and toss about, thereby leading one to mistake them for the trunk of Airavata. It shines with its high ivory portal and is lovely with the array of rich and gay banners, beautifully dyed with saffron and whose finger-like ends gracefully flutter in the breeze (by the force of the wind), and seem to say. "Come hither, come hither." Its both sides are attractive with auspicious crystal pots adorned with bright-green mango twigs that spring up gracefully, and are set at the foot of the pillars that support the portal. Its doors are of gold, and are thickly set with diamonds, which are as hard to pierce as the breast of a great demon, and it causes weariness to the desires of the poor. Really, its splendour catches forcibly the sight of even the most indifferent man.

Maid.—Come, sir ; and enter this first court.

Vid.—('Entering and looking about.') Aye ! Here in this first court are rows of balconies, white as the moon, conch and lotus-stalks, whitened by handfuls of white powder strewn over them, and glittering with golden stair-ways inlaid with all sorts of gems, and they seem to gaze down on Ujjayini with moon-like faces consisting of their crystal-windows, from which strings of pearls are dangling. The door-keeper is seated comfortably and dozes like a learned Brahmin. The crows which are tempted by the rice mixed with curdled milk, do not eat the offering, being of the same colour as the mortar. Direct me, Madam.

Maid.—Come, sir; and enter this second court.

Vid.—(Entering and looking about.) Aye! Here in this second court, are tied the bullocks of the chariot that are very fat with mouthfuls of grass and grain-husks that are brought for them from the neighbourhood, and whose horns are anointed with oil. And, here is another, a buffalo, snorting (sighing deep) like a gentleman that is insulted. And here, again, is a ram whose neck is being rubbed like that of a wrestler after the fight is over. And here are horses whose hair is trimmed and dressed. And here is a monkey that is tied fast as a thief, in the stable. (Looking in another direction) And here an elephant is fed by its keepers with cakes of boiled rice dripping with oil. Show me the way, madam.

Maid.—Come, sir; and enter this third court.

Vid.—(Entering and looking about.) Oh! Wonderful! Here in the third court are these seats prepared for young men of birth to sit on. A half-read book is lying on the gaming-table; and here is the table itself with chessmen, made of gems. And here are courtezans, and old Vilas, moving about, who are clever in the matter of bringing about union or discord in love affairs, and who hold in their hands various pictures painted in many colours. Show me the way, madam.

Maid.—Come, sir; and please enter this fourth court.

Vid.—(Entering and looking about.) Aye! And, here, in this fourth court, the Mridangas, being beaten by the fingers of maidens, are booming like the clouds; the cymbals are falling as the stars from heaven when their store of religious merit is exhausted; the flute is resounding music sweetly like the humming of the bees; and here, again, is a lute that someone places on the lap like a girl excited by jealousy, and is gently stroked on by the fingers. And here are courtesan-girls that sing as sweet as the bees that are intoxicated with the drink of honey, are taught dancing and are made to recite a drama with the sentiment of Sringar in it. And water-pitchers hanging in the windows are enjoying the breeze. Show me the way, madam.

Maid.—Come, sir; and enter this fifth court.

Vid.—(Entering and looking about.) Here in this fifth court, the overpowering smell of asafetida and oil rises enough to excite the hunger of a poor man. The kitchen is kept hot all the day, and the puffs of steam, laden with all sorts of good smells, look like sighs issuing from its mouth-like doors. The smell of the preparation of all kinds of food creates much appetite in me. And here, the butcher's boy is washing (dressing) the flesh of an animal as if it were an old piece of cloth. The cook is preparing all kinds of food. Sweetmeats are being made. Cakes are being baked; (To himself.) How I wish water is given for washing my feet, and am invited for this excellent dinner! (Looking in another direction.) Really, this dwelling with its courtezans and bastard-pages, adorned with various jewels, appear to be heaven itself, with its Gandharvas and Apsarasas. Tell me, who are you bastards?

Bastards.—We are bastard pages, petted and fondled in strangers' dwelling, fed on strangers' food, and begotten by other men upon stranger-women. We are intent on watching other's wealth and as for our merits, very little needs be said; and we sport in mirth like young elephants. (28)

Vid.—Show me the way, madam.

Mad.—Come sir, and enter this sixth court.

Vid.—(Entering and looking about.) Aye! Here in this sixth court, these architectural arches, that are made of gold and gems, and are set with sapphires, present the spectacle of the home of the rainbow. The jewellers are mutually testing the lapis lazuli, the pearls, the corals, the topezes, the sapphires, the कर्केतर gems, the rubies, emeralds, and all the other kinds of gems. Rubies are being set in gold. Golden ornaments are being made. Pearls are being strung on a red cord. Pieces of lapis lazuli are being finely polished. Shells are being cut. Corals are being whetted on touch-stones. Wet and spreadout saffron is being dried up. Musk is being shaken. Sandal-paste is being carefully prepared. Perfumes are being compounded. Betel-leaves and camphor are being given to courtezans and their lovers. Coquettish glances are being exchanged. Laughter is prevailing everywhere. Wine is being drunk incessantly with sounds of glee. Here are men-servants, here are maid-servants, and here are men who have neglected their children, wife and wealth, and who beguile the time in drinking having been left to themselves by the courtesan maidens, after having drunk from the liquor-jars. Show me the way, Madam.

Maid.—Come, sir, and enter this seventh court.

Vid.—(Entering and looking about.) Aye! Here in this seventh court, pairs of doves, seated comfortably in snug dovecotes, are engaged in kissing each other, and are very happy. And here, is a parrot in a cage, repeating verses, like a Brahman, with its belly full of curdled milk and rice. And here, again is a talking thrush, chattering like a house-maid who tries to show herself (as best as she could), because somebody had noticed her. A cuckoo whose throat is delighted with having tasted the essence of various fruits, is cooing like a procuress. Rows of cages are suspended from pegs. Quails are being made to fight with one another. Partridges are being made to talk, Caged pigeons are being incited. This tame peacock is dancing happily about, as if adorned with various jewels, and is, as it were, by shaking its wings fanning the roof, heated by the rays of the sun. (Looking in another direction.) Here are pairs of flamingoes, which appear as if they were the rays of the moon collected together, and that wander about after lovely maidens, as if they are teaching a graceful gait. And here again are tame cranes moving here and there, like old eunuchs. Aye! This courtesan has made a name for the collections of various birds. Really, the dwelling of this courtesan seems to be like the Nandana garden of Indra. Show me the way, Madam.

Mad.—Come, sir, and enter this eighth court.

Vid.—(Entering and looking about) Madam, who is this wrapped in a silk cloak, and adorned with numerous, wonderful and duplicate ornaments, who wanders about, shuffling with awkward movements of the body.

Maid.—Sir, this is the brother of my mistress.

Vid.—What amount of penances had he to perform, to be the brother of Vasantasena? But no,—

He may be glittering, loving, and even perfumed. But yet he is unfit to be resorted to by the world, as a chamṡaka tree grown in a grave-yard. (29) (Looking in another direction). But, Madam, who is that lady that is covered with a mantle with flowers, knitted in the texture, sitting on this high seat, with shoes on her greasy feet?

Maid.—Sir, that is the mother of my mistress.

Vid.—What an expansive belly the dirty old witch has got! I believe she was first brought in like a big idol, and then only the entrance was built in this house.

Maid.—O! Man! Don't ridicule our mother in this way. She is suffering from a quartan ague.

Vid.—(Bursting out into laughter.) O thou blessed quartan ague! Look thou upon me, a Brahman, with this thy favour!

Maid.—Wretched fellow! May death strike you!

Vid.—(Bursts out laughing) Why, slave-wench, a person whose belly is swollen and fleshy like this is better dead.

If this mother of Vasantasena who is swollen with wine and other intoxicants, dies, then a thousand jackals would have an ample dinner. (30)

Madam, do any ships of yours sail ?

Maid.—None, sir, none.

Vid.—Or, why is it asked at all ? Your breasts, hips and loins are themselves the agreeable vessels, floating in the ocean of Cupid, of clear waters of love. I have thus seen Vasantasena's palace with its various contents and eight courts, and really it seems to me as if I had seen the three worlds in one and the same place. I haven't got the eloquence to praise it. Is this the house of a courtesan, or a piece of Kubera's palace ? Where is your mistress ?

Maid.—Sir, she remains in the orchard. Enter, sir.

Vid.—( Entering and looking about. ) Aye ! How charming the orchard looks ! Here are many trees that are covered with excellent flowers that are uniformly blossomed; silken swings are hung under the dense trees, just big enough for a girl to sit in. The golden jasmine, the shephalika, the white jasmine, the jasmine, the navamalika, the crimson amaranth, the spring creeper and so many other flowers have fallen of themselves, that really the orchard by its charming appearance throws into shade the Nandana garden itself. ( Looking in another direction ). And the pond here looks like the morning twilight, for the lilies and red lotuses are as splendid as the rising sun. And again.

This Asoka tree, with its newly-sprung flowers and sprouts, shines like a brave warrior in the thick of fight besmeared with clotted crimson gore mixed with mud. Well where is your mistress ?

Maid.—Sir bring your looks down ( or look lower ) and you will see my mistress. (31)

Vid.—( Perceives Vasantasena and approaches ) Heaven bless you ?

Vas.—( Speaking in Sanskrit. ) Ah ! Maitreya ! ( Rising ) You are highly welcome. Here is a seat. Pray be seated here.

Vid.—Madam, please be seated.

( They both seat themselves. )

Vas.—Is the young merchant doing well ?

Vid.—Madam, he is well.

Vas.—Good Maitreya !

Do the birds in the form of friends yet resort happily to him, who is a fair tree, rich with fruits of excellences, whose leaves are virtues, whose boughs are modesty, whose root is confidence, and whose flowers magnanimity ! ( 32 )

Vid —( To himself. ) How rightly the naughty woman has observed ! ( Aloud. ) Yes, indeed.

Vas.—Sir, what is the purpose of your coming ? ( What brings you here ? )

Vid.—Listen, madam. The respectful Charudatta raises his folded hands respectfully to the head and requests you, madam,—

Vas.—( Folding her hands. ) What does he command ?

Vid.—“ I have freely ‘gambled away the golden casket, taking it to be mine and it is not known where the gaming-master has gone, for he is engaged as the king’s emissary. ”

Maid.—Madam, fortunate you are ! The gentleman has turned out a gambler.

Vas.—( Aside ) Even though it was stolen by a thief, he says out of pride, that he gambled it a way. I love him all the more for that.

Vid.—Then, kindly accept this jewel-necklace in its place.

Vas.—( To herself. ) Shall I show him the ornament ?

( Reflecting ) Oh rather, not so soon.

Vid.—Why don’t you take this necklace ?

Vas.—( Laughing and looking at her friend ) Why should I not take the necklace, Maitreya ? ( She takes it and keeps it by her side. Aside ) How is it that drops of honey fall from the mango tree even after its blossoms are gone ? ( Aloud. ) Sir pray tell the worthy gambler, Charudatta, in my name, that I shall pay him a visit this evening.

Vid.—( To himself. ) What else does she mean to take, by paying a visit to him ? ( Aloud. ) Madam, I will tell him—( Aside ) to have nothing more to do with this courtesan.

[ Exit ]

Vas.—Girl, take this ornament, and we shall go to bring cheer to Charudatta,

Maid.—Madam, look up, look up ! An untimely storm is gathering

Vas.—The clouds may gather, the dark night may lower, the rain may fall heavily and for ever. I care not a straw for all of them, when, my heart is directed towards my lover. (33)

Take the necklace, girl, and come quickly.

( Exeunt omnes. )

( Here ends the Fourth Act. )

ACT V.

—:o:—

( Then enter seated the love-lorn Chakradatta )

Cha.—( Looking up. ) An untimely storm <sup>दृष्टि</sup> is impending. For, The peacocks gaze and spread out their feathers high; the swans, desirous of departing, are uneasy and are out of joy; and the untimely storm instantly obstructs the sky equally as the heart of a lover. (1)

The cloud, dark like the bee and the wet belly of a bull, clad in yellow mantle constituted by the flash of lightning, and bearing a conch shell in the form of collection of cranes, shines like a second Vishnu ready to occupy the sky. (2)

The cloud has risen high like Vishnu, the Wielder of Chakra,—the cloud which is as dark as Vishnu's form, which has for the conch the irregular lines of storks and which is clad in the silken mantle of the streaks of lightning. (3)

These torrents of rain, rapidly fallen from out of the cloudy womb, similar to the melted silver, and visible at interval, through the gleam of the lamp of lightning, fall like the fringe, rent from the robe of heaven. (4)

Here the sky itself looks like a canvass whereon are painted several figures on account of those high-soaring clouds, scattered and separated by the wind, and having various forms—some looking like well-united pairs of Chakravaka birds, some like swans flying abroad, and others like shoals of fishes and alligators, and a few like lofty mansions. (5)

The sky darkened by the clouds is like the face of धृतराष्ट्र; the overjoyed peacock shrills (shouts in joy.) like haughty दुर्योधन; the cuckoo, like युधिष्ठिर vanquished at dice play, is forced to wander about, and the flamingoes, like the sons of Pandu have to pine in an unknown place ( or have to remain in a state of incognito. ) (5)

( Reflecting ) It is long since Maitreya went to visit Vasantasena. And even yet he doesn't come.

( Enter Vidushaka. )

Vid.—Ah ! How avaricious and discourteous the courtesan is ! She made the least reference to other matters. Over and over she repeated something about the affection she feels, and then in the course of conversation, the necklace was quickly received by her.

And with all her great wealth and affluences she hasn't even told me—"Good Maitreya, take some rest, and go after drinking a cup of water, at least." I shall never behold even the face of this wretched courtesan. (With defection.) And indeed, it has been rightly said:—"It is hard to find a lotusplant that hasn't a root, a merchant that doesn't cheat, a goldsmith that never steals, a village gathering that never quarrels, and a courtesan that is not avaricious." Well, I shall go to my dear friend and turn his thoughts away from this courtesan. (Walking about and beholding.) Why! my good friend remains seated in the orchard I shall go near him. (Approaching.) Heaven bless you! May you prosper!

Cha.—(Looking up.) Ah, my friend Maitreya has come, You are very welcome, my friend. Be seated.

Vid.—I have taken my seat.

Cha.—Friend, tell me what has become of your errand.

Vid.—My errand, indeed, turned out a failure!

Cha.—What! Did she not accept the necklace?

Vid.—Where could we have such a piece of good luck? Having respectfully raised to the head her folded hands that are tender and delicate like the fresh lotus, she took away the necklace.

Cha.—Then, why do you say, "turned out a failure?"

Vid.—Why should I not say so, when we have lost a necklace that was the glory of the four seas, for a golden casket of little value, that was stolen by a thief, and of which we had neither a bite nor a drink?

Cha.—Not so, my friend. (See Verse 29—Act III.)

Vid.—Ah, my friend, this, again, is my second grievance. She made signs to her companion, covered her face with the hem of her garment, and laughed at me. And so, Brahman as I am, I shall prostrate before you respectfully and beg of you to divert your thoughts away from the courtesan, for, the course is fraught with many sins. A courtesan is like a pebble that has entered your shoe, and it is with great difficulty you can get rid of her. And one thing more, my friend. [A courtesan, an elephant, a scribe, a mendicant friar, a swindler, and an ass,—where these dwell, not even villains are born.]

Cha.—Oh, my friend a truce to all your scandals! I have been kept away from her even by my own circumstances. For see:—

The horse makes all determination to hasten its march; but his legs don't sustain him to that extent, owing to the loss of energy. So also, man's fickle desires wander everywhere, but, grown weary, find repose, once more, in his bosom. (8)

And, again, my friend :

He who, is possessed of wealth, can have her love ; for this personage is to be won by wealth.

( To himself. ) No—This personage is to be won over by virtues alone.—( Aloud. )

We have been deserted by Riches and so, of course, she too has been also forsaken by us. ( 9 )

Vid.—( Looks down. To himself. ) From the way he looks up and sighs deeply, I conclude that my effort to check him (or to distract him) has simply augmented his longing for her. Rightly has it been said "Love is refractory." ( Aloud. ) O friend, she asked me to tell you that she would come here even this evening. I infer that she isn't satisfied with the necklace and is coming to have something else.

Cha.—Let her come, my friend. She shall depart quite satisfied.

Servant.—( Entering. ) Listen, O, good people !

The more it rains in sheets, the more my skin gets drenched ; the more the cold wind beats, the more my bosom shakes. ( 10 )

( Bursting into a laughler. ) I play upon the flute with seven holes excellently, I can also touch the resounding lute with seven strings ; I sing (music) just like an ass, and what is Tumbaru or Narada in singing as compared to me ? ( 11 )

I have been ordered by my mistress Vasantasena:—"Kumbhilaka, go and inform worthy Charudatta of my arrival." So here I am going to the house of the good Charudatta. ( He walks about, and, as he enters, discovers Charudatta. ) Here is Charudatta seated in the orchard. And here is that wicked fellow, too. So I shall go near them. What ! The orchard-door is shut ? Well, I shall hint my arrival to the wicked fellow. ( He throws pebbles of stone at him. )

Vid.—Aye ! Who is this that is pelting me with stone as if I were an apple-tree, inside of a fence ?

Cha.—It may have been thrown by the pigeons that play on the roof of the garden-house.

Vid.—O ! Wretched being ! O, you wicked pigeon ! Wait a while, wait a while. By means of this stick, I shall make you fall down from the roof to the ground like a well-ripe mango fruit ( He lifts the stick and runs. )

Cha.—( Dragging him by his sacred thread. ) Sit down, my friend. Let it go ? Leave the poor pigeon alone with his mate.

Serv.—What ! He sees the pigeon, and doesn't see me. Very well, I will hit him with another ball of earth. ( He does so. )

Vid.—( Looking about in all directions. ) How ! Kumbhilaka ? I shall come presently. ( He approaches and opens the gate. ) Well. Kumbhilaka, come in. You are very welcome.

Serv.—( Entering. ) I salute you, sir.

Vid.—Where have you come, man, in this rain and darkness ?

Serv.—Here is she.

Vid.—Who is she ? Who is she ?

Serv.—She, She, She.

Vid.—What do you mean, you son of a slave ? Why do you, like an old beggar in a famine, hiss “She she she” ( सा सा सा ) ?

Serv.—And what makes you caw, like a crow that is desirous of Indra's feast, with your “Who, who, who” ( का का का ) ?

Vid.—Then, tell, me.

Serv.—( To himself. ) Well, I shall tell him thus. ( Aloud ) I will give you a puzzle.

Vid.—And I shall place my feet over your head.

Serv.—Aye, guess if you can. In what season do the mango-trees blossom ?

Vid.—Aye, son of a slave, in summer.

Serv.—( Laughing. ) No, no.

Vid.—( To himself. ) What shall I say now ? ( Reflecting. ) Good ! I'll go and ask Charudatta. ( Aloud. ) Just wait a moment ( Approaching Charudatta. ) My friend, I shall just ask you in what season the mango-trees blossom.

Cha.—You fool, it is in the spring season ( वसन्त )

Vid.—( Returning to the servant. ) You, fool, in spring. ( वसन्त )

Serv.—Now I will give you another puzzle. Who guards flourishing villages ?

Vid.—Why, the guard.

Serv.—( Laughing. ) Aye ! No, no.

Vid.—Well, I have fallen into doubt. ( Reflecting. ) Good ! I will ask Charudatta again. ( He returns and puts the same question to Charudatta. )

Cha.—The army ( सेना ), my friend.

Vid.—( Approaching the servant. ) The army ( सेना ), you son of a slave.

Serv.—Now, man, put these two together, and repeat quickly.

Vid.—Sena. Vasanta.

Serv.—Repeat it turned around.

Vid.—( Turning around ) Sena Vasanta.

Serv.—You, fool ! you, wretch ! Transpose the pada ( पद )

Vid.—( Turning his feet around. ) Sena-Vasanta.

Serv.—You fool ! the pada ( पद ) of letters ( अक्षर )

Vid.—Vasantasena.

Serv.—It is she that has come here.

Vid.—Then I shall inform Charudatta, of this. ( Approaching )

O, Charudatta, your creditor is come.

Cha.—Why should a creditor come into my house ?

Vid.—Not in the house, perhaps, but at the gateway. See. Vasantasena is come here.

Cha.—Why do you deceive me with false news, my friend ?

Vid.—If you won't believe my word, then ask this Kumbhilaka: you son of a slave, come near.

Serv.—( Approaching. ) I salute you, sir.

Cha.—You are welcome, my good fellow. Tell me. Is Vasantasena really come here ?

Serv.—She, ( Vasantasena ) is come here.

Cha.—( Joyfully ) My good fellow, never have I let pleasing news go unrewarded. Therefore accept this reward for you. ( He gives him his mantle. )

Servant.—( Takes it and bows Joyfully. ) I shall just tell my mistress. ( Exit )

Vid.—Do you understand why she comes in a storm like this ?

Cha.—I do not quite understand, my friend.

Vid.—I know. She thinks that the necklace is of little value, and the golden casket is of great value, and being unsatisfied, she has come to look for something more.

Cha.—( To himself. ) She shall go, then, fully satisfied.

( Then enter the love-lorn Vasantasena, attired in a splendid costume, befitting a woman who goes to meet her lover, a maid with an umbrella, and a Vita. )

Vita.—( Referring to Vasantasena. )

She is the goddess Laksmi without the lotus flower, she is the delicate weapon of the God of Love, she is the cause of grief to women of high birth ; she is a blossom of the lovely tree of love. She loves modesty even in passion's hour, and accompanied by crowds of lovers as by travellers, she walks gracefully and slow to her delightful abode of pleasure as to a Kshetra. (12)

See, Vasantasena, see !

The clouds which (or whose disc-like surfaces) hang over the summits of mountains, and which are gloomy and (drooping) like the heart of a female that is separated from her lover, are thundering loudly, and at their roar the peacocks suddenly fly up (in glee) and fan the sky, as if with fans inlaid with gems. (13)

And again :—

The frogs, with mouths wet with mud, and pelted with torrents of rain, drink the rain-water ; the peacock, full of joy shrieks and the Kadamba flowers glow like lamps. The clouds screen the moon and bring it into discredit just as the life of a Saint (संन्यासी) chosen (वृत्तः) by ignominious people as a garb to veil their vile and mean ways brings discredit upon संन्यास; and lightning, like a lowborn maiden flits about without resting anywhere. (14)

Vas.—Sir, what you say is most true. For,

The night, the rival mistress, thunders, as it were, thus with anger : “O foolish Vasantasena, if the lover can find pleasure with me alone with my swelling cloud-breasts, what business have you got here ? And, again and again, she checks me and impedes my way. (15)

Vila.—Very well. Let it be so. Reville it.

Vas.—And yet, sir, what is the use of reviling one who is jealous, as is the nature of all women ? Let it be observed my friend.

The clouds may shower torrents of rain, may roar like anything, and may even dash down lightning itself. Women that go to meet their lovers, mind neither cold nor heat. (16)

Vila.—Look up, Vasantasena, look up ! Here is another.

Sped by the fury of the wind, and (furnished) with store of arrows in the form of big torrents, and with thunder for the sound of drums and with gleaming banners of lightning, the cloud deprives the moon of its rays in the sky, like a warrior-king who carries off all the treasure (mass) of the revenue of a foe who has grown imbecile in his very capital. (17)

Vas.—True, true. Alas ! There is something more than this.

These thundering clouds alone, dark like the king of elephants, and variegated because of the accompaniment of lightning and cranes, and with their bellies inflated and consequently drooping down, have already sufficiently wounded the heart of lovelorn women. But, oh, why should the malignant and wicked heron, which is as it were the drum that sounds the doom of wives separated from their husbands, cry "Pravri!" "Pravri!" (Rain! Rain!) and thus throw bring on the wound? (18)

Vita.—Very true, Vasantasena. And yet again :

It seems as if the sky is desirous of assuming the guise of a fierce elephant, the cranes constituting the white fillet for his front and the lightning waving the chowrie. (19)

Vas.—Look up, sir, look up!

These clouds, black like wet tamala leaves, have completely swallowed up the sun in the sky. The anthills, smitten by torrents of rain sink down, like elephants that are struck by arrows. The lightnings wander about like golden lamps over mansions; and the moon-light, like the wife of a powerless husband, has been forcibly snatched by the clouds. (20)

Vita.—See, Vasantasena, see!

These clouds, which have for their girdle the string of lightning and which dash against each other like elephants, pouring their torrents of rain, are as it were, lifting the earth, at Indra's bidding, with chains of silver. (21)

And look again!

The clouds, black like herds of buffaloes, and charged with stormy wind, and moving in the atmosphere, like the seas on their wings of lightning, pierce the earth that is exuberant with fragrance and clad in fresh and green verdure, by means of showers of rain, as if with arrows, made of gems. (22)

Vas.—Friend,

And yonder rises another cloud, darkening as it were all the quarters with collyrium. The peacocks implore to it loudly with their shrill cries to draw near! the cranes fly up quickly and embrace it ardently; and the swans that have deserted the lotuses, anxiously watch it. (23)

Vita.—True. For see!

The whole world, lying within the house of rain and furnished with the covering of umbrellas in the shape of multitudinous clouds in the sky, the abode of swelling clouds, is now slumbering, as it were; profoundly. Its eyes in the form of multitude of lotuses are closed and motionless, it has lost all the distinction of night and day; the darkness is seen at quick intervals through gleams of lightning; and the quarters of the sky are completely enveloped. (24)

Vas.—True. See! See!

The stars are lost, like services rendered to an ungrateful person; the quarters of the sky no longer shine (are devoid of lustre) like wives separated from their husbands; and in truth; I believe, the sky, molten in the fire of the weapon of the lord of gods (Indra's bolt), falls down in the shape of watery streams. (25)

And yet again.

The clouds now arise, now descend, pour forth showers, thunder, and create much gloom: and like a person who has for the first time obtained wealth, they assume manifold and strange appearances. (26)

Vita.—It is quite so.

The sky is, as it were, glowing with the lightning's glare; it seems to laugh aloud, because of hundreds of cranes that are on high; it is, as were, ready to fight with Indra's thunderbolt discharging shaftslike torrents; it yells out, as it were with distinct roars of thunder; it reels by the force of the winds, and emits dense smokes with dark blue clouds as with black serpents. (27)

Vas.—O cloud, you are devoid of shame in as much as, while I am going to the residence of my lower, you terrify me with your roar, and seize me with your hands in the shape of torrents of rain. (28)

O Indra!

Was I ever bound to you by love, that now your clouds roar like mighty lions? It does not behove you to impede my way with your streaming rain, when I am longing for my lover. (29)

And again.

O Indra! Just as you, for Ahalya's sake, falsely represented yourself to be Gautama and thus removed the obstacle in your way; so consider that I am now suffering (from love's pain), as thou didn't suffer then, and draw off the clouds. (30)

And yet again.

O Indra! Go on thundering, shower floods of rain, and even send down hundreds of thunderbolts. Never will it be possible for you to obstruct women that eagerly start to meet their lovers. (31)

If clouds roar, let them do so; for men are ever cruel! But oh, thou maiden lightning, you too aren't aware of the suffering of maidens! (32)

Vita.—Madam, do not scold the lightning. She is your friend.

Like an unsteady golden cord, on the breast of Airavata elephant, like a white banner hoisted on the top of a mountain, she, the lamp of Indra's palace, indicates to you the residence of your beloved. (33)

Vas.—And here, sir, is his house.

Vita.—There is nothing in which you are to be instructed, versed as you are in all the arts. Yet affection for you makes me prattle. When you enter here, you must not show yourself too angry.

If you get angry, there is no love: or rather, except for anger, where is there love at all? Get angry, and make him angry also. Be pacified, and pacify your lover also at the same time. (34)

Very well; so much for that. Who is there? Please inform Charudatta of this.

'In this hour, while the clouds are shining, and the fragrant Kadamba and Nipa flowers have blossomed, she full of love and joy, and with her hair drenched with rain, has come to her lover's abode, eager to see you, though terrified by lightnings and the roar of clouds; and she is cleansing her feet, the anklets whereon have been soiled by mud. (35)

Cha.—( Listening ) My friend, kindly find out ( learn ) what this means.

Vid.—Yes, sir. ( Approaching Vasantasena respectfully. ) Heaven bless you!

Vas.—I salute you, sir. Welcome to you, sir. ( To the Vita. ) Sir, the maid with the umbrella is entirely at your service.

Vita.—( To himself. ) Very cleverly I am asked to go back ( sent back ) by means of this plan. ( Aloud ) Let it be so. Worthy Vasantasena:—

Let your extreme generosity be the price of happiness and thereby achieve the highest goal of the profession of a courtesan ( just as the highest aim in a market is to ensure a profitable sale ) the profession which procures all the joys of pleasure of love, which is the birthplace of all superciliousness, intrigue, deception, and lies and of which fraud is the essence and which is the abode of amorous sports. (36)

Vas.—Good Maitreya, where is your gambler?

Vid.—( To himself ) Ah! by being called by her " gambler, " my dear friend is complimented. ( Aloud ) Madam, here he is in the dry orchard.

Vas.—Sir, what do you call a dry orchard?

Vid.—Madam, a place where none eats or drinks.

( Vasantasena smiles )

Vid.—Pray enter, madam.

Vas.—( Aside to her maid ) What shall I say when I enter?

Maid.—" Gambler, fares the evening happy with you?"

Vas.—Is it possible to say so ?

Maid.—The occasion will of itself render it possible.

Vid.—Enter, madam.

Vas.—(Enters, approaches Charudatta, and strikes him with flowers.) Well, gambler, fares this evening happy with you ?

Cha.—(Beholding her.) Ah, Vasantasena is come here (Rising up with joy) Oh, my beloved,

Ever have my evenings passed in listlessness, and ever have my nights passed in sighing. But, now that I am united with you O longeyed lady, this evening has brought my griefs to end. (37)

You are very welcome, worthy lady. Here is a seat. Pray be seated.

Vid.—Here is a seat. Be seated, madam. (Vasantasena sits. Then all seat themselves.)

Cha.—Friend, behold, behold.

The Kadamba flower, hanging from the tip of her ear, and dripping drops of rain, has bathed one of her breasts like the prince installed as the heir apparent. (38)

Friend, Vasantasena's garments are wet. Let two other excellent garments be brought.

Vid.—Yes, sir.

Maid.—Good Maitreya, you better keep awhile. I myself shall minister to the needs of my mistress (she does so).

Vid.—(Aside to Charudatta). My friend, I would just ask the lady a question.

Cha.—Then do so.

Vid.—(Aloud.) Madam, what brought you here, when the moon, too, is lost, and when it is so dark and stormy ?

Maid.—The Brahman, madam, is very plainspoken.

Vas.—Say, rather, that he is very clever.

Maid.—Here has my mistress come to ask you what that pearl necklace is worth.

Vid.—(Aside to Charudatta.) There ! I told you so. She considers that the pearl necklace is of little value, and that the golden casket is of great value. Being unsatisfied, she has come here to look for something more.

Maid.—For, my mistress, thinking that it was her own, gambled it away : and nobody knows where the gambling master who is a spy of the king, has gone.

Vid.—Madam, you are simply repeating, what was said before (by us.)

Maid.—While we are seeking him, pray take this golden casket. ( She displays the casket. )

( Maitreya reflects. )

Maid.—Sir, you examine it very closely. Have you ever seen this before ?

Vid.—Madam, it is the skilful workmanship that captivates my eye.

Maid.—Sir, your eye deceives you. This is the selfsame golden casket.

Vid.—( With joy ) Well, my friend, this is the selfsame golden casket,—the very one that was stolen by thieves from our house.

Cha.—Friend.

The very same artifice that we devised before. for the requittal of her ( stolen ) deposit is now practised on us. But, really, the whole thing, I trust is a mere mockery. (39)

Vid.—But, my friend, I swear by my Brahman-hood that what I say is very true.

Cha.—Then, the news is most welcome to us.

Vib.—( Aside to Charudatta. ) I shall just ask where they got this.

Cha.—There is no harm in that.

Vid.—( Whispers in the maid's ear. ) In this manner ?

Maid.—( Whispers in Vidushaka's ear. ) Quite so.

Cha.—What is being talked about ? Why are we excluded from it ?

Vid.—( Whispers in Charudatta's ear. ) So and so.

Cha.—My good girl, is this really the same golden casket ?

Maid.—Yes, sir, the very same.

Cha.—My good girl, never have I let the bearer of good news go unrewarded. Take this ring for your reward ( He looks at his finger, and noticing the ring gone betrays his embarrassment. )

Vas.—( To herself. ) It is for the very reason that I love you.

Cha.—( Aside to Maitreya. ) Alas !

For a man, who is devoid of wealth in this world, what use is there, in the first place, of his life itself ? Being incapable of counteraction, his fits of anger and his favour become equally fruitless. (40)

And again:—

A bird that is destitute of its wings, a tree that is withered, a lake destitute of waters, a snake whose fang is drawn out, these all and a pauper are equally bereft of any use. (41)

And again:—

A poor man is like a house that is bereft of its inmates, a well that is destitute of waters, and a tree that is shorn of its leaves because the hours of pleasure of those, who forget themselves in the company of their beloved, yield no fruit (to others.) (42)

Vid.—Do not give vent to your feelings. (Aloud, in jest.) Please give me back my bathing garment.

Vas.—Worthy Charudatta, it is not proper that you should test me by means of this pearl necklace.

Cha.—(With a bashful smile.) Vasantasena, look, look.

(See Tran. verse 24 Act III)

Vid.—Girl, are you going to sleep here to-night?

Maid.—(Laughing.) Worthy Maitreya, you show yourself remarkably blunt now.

Vid.—See, my friend, the rain sets in again, in great showers, as if to drive away people who are seated comfortably.

Cha.—You have said quite truly.

These torrents of rain pierce through the clouds, as do the shoots of lotus-stalks the mire, and they fall down like floods of tears, shed from heaven on account of this calamity that has befallen the moon. (44)

And again:—

In streams which are as pure as the heart of the virtuous: but at the same time fierce and hard like the arrows of Arjuna, the clouds darkblue like the vestment of Balarama, seem to pour out all Indra's hoard of pearls. (45)

See, my beloved, see!

The sky is, as it were, besmeared with these clouds, resembling the unguent of the tamala leaves ground to juice and it is, as it were, fanned by the continuous cool and fragrant evening breezes. And, this red lightning, appearing of itself, and desirous of uniting with the clouds, embraces it, as a fondling mistress, (affected by love at the rising of clouds, comes of her own will and embraces her beloved.) (Vasantasena displays her passion and throws her arms about Charudatta.) (47)

Cha.—(He feels her touch and embraces her in turn.)

O cloud, roar on louder, and louder; for through your kindness my love-stricken frame in which a desire for enjoyment has been created at the touch (embrace) of Vasantasena and which is full of horripillation, being thrilled with joy resembles the sprouts of the Kadamba flower. (47)

Vid.—O storm ! O base-born fellow ! Your behaviour is very ungentlemanly, so much as to terrify this worthy lady with your lightning.

Cha.—Do not rebuke the storm, my friend.

Let the stormy day last for hundreds of years with ceaseless rain, and let the lightning flash together. For, it is on account of them, that my beloved who is inaccessible to men of my position, voluntarily embraced me. (48)

And again, my friend :

The lives of them are really blessed, to whose abode their beloved have come of themselves, and whose bodily frame is embraced with those of their beloved, while they are yet wet and chill with rain. (49)

My beloved Vasantasena.

The canopy of the garden house, with a terrace disjointed at its extremities, is some how supported on the pillars, being quite worn out. The whitewash on this painted wall is cracked and the wall itself is completely drenched with the shower of rain. (50)

(Looking up.) Ah ! The rainbow ! See, my beloved, see !

The sky yawns with its swollen chin in the form of clouds as it were, with the tongue of lightning, and its arms in the form of the rain-bow being uplifted. (51)

Come, let us enter inside the house. (They rise and walk about.)

The showers of rain fall shrill on the palm leaves, with low heavy sound (rumbling) on the trees, harshly over the rocks, and violently on the waters, and thereby act, as if keeping time, like a lute when played upon. (52)

(Exeunt omnes.)

End of the Fifth Act.

---

ACT VI.

—:O:—

(Enter a Maid.)

Maid.—What ! Isn't my mistress awake yet ? Well, I shall enter and wake her. (She walks about.)

(Vasantasena appears with her body covered, but still asleep.)

Maid.—(Discovering her.) Please get up, mistress, Please get up. The day dawns.

Vas.—(Awakening.) What ! Has the day dawned, while yet it is night ?

Maid.—For us it is morning ; but for my mistress, it is night still.

Vas.—But, girl, where is your gambler ?

Maid.—Madam, the worthy Charudatta went to the old garden Pushpakaranda, after giving a commission to Vardhamanaka.

Vas.—What commission ?

Maid.—To have the chariot ready before day-light ; for, he said, Vasantasena was to go.

Vas.—Girl, where am I to go ?

Maid.—Madam, to the place where Charudatta is.

Vas.—(Embracing her maid.) I did not have a good look at him in the night. To-day, I shall have a clear and distinct look at him. Girl, I have found my way here into the inner courtyard.

Maid.—Not only into the inner courtyard but into the heart of every one who lives here.

Vas.—Are the attendants of Charudatta distressed ?

Maid.—They will be.

Vas.—When ?

Maid.—When my mistress will go away.

Vas.—I myself shall be distressed then in the first place.

(Courteously.) Here, girl, take this pearl necklace. You must go to the revered Dhuta, my lady sister, and give this to her. And give her this message : "I am the slave won by the virtues of the worthy Charudatta, and so am I in relation to you also. And, I wish that this pearl necklace must adorn your neck alone."

Maid.—Madam, if Charudatta gets angry with the worthy mistress ?

Vas.—Go. He will not be angry.

Maid.—(Receiving the necklace.) Yes mistress. (She goes out and subsequently returns.) Madam, the revered Dhuta says:—

"My lord made a present of it to you and that it would not be proper on my part to receive it. My lord and husband, by himself, is my most excellent ornament."

(Then enter Radanika, with Charudatta's child.)

Radanika.—Come, dear, let us play with the little cart.

Child.—(Mournfully.) Radanika, what use to me is this little clay cart? Get me that golden little cart.

Rad.—(Sighing.) Child, how can we have any dealing with gold now? When your papa is prosperous again, then you shall play with a golden little cart. In the meanwhile, I shall be just amusing him. I shall approach the respectful Vasantasena. (Approaching Vasantasena.) Madam, I salute you.

Vas.—Radanika, you are very welcome. Whose child is this? He wears no ornaments, and yet his moon-like face delights my heart.

Rad.—This is, indeed, Rohasena, the son of the noble Charudatta.

Vas.—(Stretching out her arms.) Come, my dear boy, and throw your arms around me. (Seating the child on her lap.) In appearance, he exactly takes after his father.

Rad.—Not merely in appearance, but I believe, also in character. Charudatta finds his best amusement in this child.

Vas.—Well, why does he cry?

Rad.—He used to play with a golden little cart, that belongs to the child of a neighbour. But that was taken away from him. When he asked for it. I made him this little clay cart and gave him. He says;—"Radanika, what use to me is this little clay cart? Get me that golden little cart."

Vas.—Alas! Alas! This little child, too, is made to suffer by the wealth of others. Ah, mighty fate! You play with the destinies of men that are like the water-drops fallen on the lotus-leaf. (Shedding tears.) Don't cry, my child. You shall play with a golden little cart.

Child.—Radanika, who is she?

Vas.—A slave of your father, won over by his virtues,

Rad.—Dear child, the lady is your mother.

Child.—Radanika, you utter a lie. If this lady is my mother, why does she wear ornaments?

Vas.—My child, you speak with your innocent looks most mournfully. (Removing her ornaments Weeping) Now, I have become your mother, Therefore, receive these ornaments, and have a golden little cart made for you. Ch. 6.
Here

Child.—No, I won't receive them. You are weeping.

Vas.—(Wiping away her tears.) I will not weep, my dear child. There! Go and play. (She fills the clay-cart with her ornaments.) Dear child, have a golden little cart made for you,

[Exit Radanika taking the child.]

[Enter Vardhamanaka, mounted on a chariot.]

Servant.—Radanika, Radanika! Tell mistress Vasantasena that the side door is open and that the carriage is standing ready.

(Enter Radanika.)

Rad.—Mistress, Vardhamanaka is here, and he says that the carriage is ready at the side door.

Vas.—Girl, let him wait a minute, while I shall dress (decorate) myself.

Rad.—(Coming out.) Wait a minute, Vardhamanaka, while the mistress dresses (decorates) herself.

Serv.—Hallo! I have forgotten the cushions of the carriage. I shall go and bring them. But, because of the ropes through the nose, the bullocks are impetuous. Very well, I shall go and return with the carriage itself.

[Exit the servant.]

Vas.—Bring me my things, girl, I shall decorate myself. (She remains doing so.)

[Then enter Sthavaraka, mounted on another carriage.]

Sthavaraka.—Samsthanaka, the king's brother-in-law has ordered me:—"Take my carriage Sthavaraka, and come quickly to the old garden Pushpakarand." Very well, I shall go there. Run, bullocks, run! (He drives about and looks around.) Why, the road is blocked with the village carts. What shall I do now? (Haughtily.) Hallo! Get out of the way! Get out of the way; (Listening.) Do you say whose chariot this is? This chariot belongs to the king's brother-in-law. So, get out of the way quickly! (Observing.) What! Here is some one that, hiding himself, runs in the other direction quickly, looking at me as a runaway gambler looks at the gaming-master. Who can this be? Or rather, what do I care about this? I shall drive quickly. O! You villagers! Get out of my way! Do you say "Wait a minute and just turn round the wheels of my cart?" Aye, I a brave man, and the servant of Samsthanaka, the king's brother-in-law, to turn the wheel of your chariot? However, the poor fellow is without help. I will do it. And I will stop this chariot at the side-entrance of Charudatta's orchard. (He stops the chariot.) I am coming!

(Exit.)

Maid.—Madam, I hear the sound of wheels. So the chariot is come.

Vas.—Come, girl. My heart is impatient. So show me way to the side-door.

Maid.—Come along my mistress.

Vas.—(Walking about.) You better stay here, girl.

Maid.—Yes, mistress.

Vas.—(Feeling the throbbing of her eye and entering the carriage.) Why should my right eye throb now? Rather the sight of Charudatta shall wipe away (avert) the evil omen.

(Enter Sthavaraka.)

Sthavaraka.—I have cleared the carts out of the way, and now I will go ahead. (Mounting on the chariot, he drives. To himself.) The chariot is heavy. Perhaps, the chariot appears heavy, because I am tired, by having turned the wheels of the cart. Very well, I will go along. Go on bullocks, go on!

(A voice behind the scenes.)

O! You door-keepers! Remain watchful at your respective stations. The young herdsman broke out from the jail, killed the jailer, broke his fetters, escaped and fled away. Seize him! Seize him!

(Then enter tossing aside the curtain Aryaka, in excited haste, well-covered, an iron chain clinging on one foot. And he walks about.)

Sthavaraka.—(To himself.) Great excitement is caused in the city. I must get out of the way very quickly.

Aryaka.—I have got out of the endless ocean of sorrow in the form of imprisonment by the king, and now, dragging along the accursed fetters clinging on my one foot, I wander about like an elephant broken loose from its chain. (1)

Being terrified by the sayings of soothsayers, King Palaka brought me from the hamlets where I lived, fettered me, and confined me in a solitary cell, to put me to death. But I have escaped from that confinement through the kindness of my dear friend Sarvilaka. (He sheds tears.)

If (royal) fortune is to attend on me, what fault is it of mine that I should be fast chained by him like a wild elephant? The superhuman power of Destiny is irresistible. The king commands the homage of all and of what avail is my hostility against the powerful? (2)

Whither shall I go, ill-fated as I am ? ( Looking about ) Here is the house of some good man, the side-door of which is open.

This house is greatly dilapidated, its great door is unbolted, and its joints are dislocated. Really, the householder is placed in miserable circumstances, and is no more lucky than myself. (3)

I will enter here and wait.

( A voice behind the scenes. )

Go on, bullocks, go on !

Aryaka.—( Listening. ) Ah ! A chariot is coming in this very direction.

It may perhaps be the vehicle of a company not mounted by peevish inmates. Or, it may be the carriage of a lady, waiting to see her mounted thereon, or, it may be some rich man's vehicle that is to be led outside. Or fortunately it may perhaps be an empty and unattended carriage, sent unto me by Fate. (4)

( Enter Vardhamanaka, the servant driving the carriage. )

Vardhamanaka.—Ah ! I have brought now the cushions of the carriage. Radanika, tell my mistress Vasantasena that the chariot is ready and that, mounting on it, she should drive to the old garden Pushpakaranda.

Aryaka.—( Listening. ) This is the chariot of a courtesan and is going out of the city. Very well. I shall get in. ( He approaches gently. )

Servant.—( Hearing. ) The tinkling of anklets is heard. So the lady has got in. Madam, the bullocks are impetuous because of the nose-ropes. So Madam, seat yourself in the back seat.

( Aryaka does so. )

Serv.—The tinkling-noise of the anklets, caused by the motion of the feet has ceased. Besides, the chariot is loaded with weight. So I am sure the lady must have got in by this time. I will, therefore, proceed. Go on, bullocks, go on ! ( He drives about )

( Then enter Viraka. )

Viraka.—Aye ! Jaya, Jayamana, Chandanaka, Mangala, Phulabhadra, and all !

Why are you quiet and inactive ? The young herdsman who was kept a captive, broke the jail as well as the heart of the king and fled away. (5)

Here ! You remain at the eastern gate of the main street, you remain at the west, you at the south, and you at the north. I will climb up this part of the rampart with Chandanaka and moving along therein. I shall be looking after him. Come on, Chandanaka, come on ! This way !

( Enter Chandanaka in excitement. )

Chandanaka.—Ah ! Viraka, Visalk, Bhimangada, Dandakala, Dandasura, and all !

Come ye all confidently. Strive quickly, and make not haste. Let not royal power move to another family ! (6)

Moreover :—

Direct one to every place, to search for him in the gardens, in assemblies, the streets, the town, the market, the hamlets and in every suspicious nook and corner. (7)

What ! Viraka ! What do your looks indicate ? Go on, tell me without any fear. Who has burst asunder the fetters, and has carried off the young cowherd ? (8)

[Who has the Sun in the eighth mansion of his horoscopic diagram ; the Moon in its fourth, Venus in its sixth, or Mars in its fifth ? (9)

Tell me, in whose horoscope Jupiter is in the sixth mansion or in the natal one, and also Saturn in the ninth ? Who can carry off the cowboy, while yet Chandanaka lives ?]

Viraka.—Chandanaka !

I swear by your heart that somebody must have quickly carried him off ; for the herdsman escaped ( ran away ) ere the Sun was half risen. (11)

Servant.—Go on, bullocks, go on !

Chan.—( Observing. ) Look, man, look !

A covered chariot is moving in the middle of the high road ; inquire immediately whose it is, and whither it goes.

Viraka.—( Looking up. ) Here, driver, stop your carriage. Whose chariot is this ? who is mounted inside ? Where is it going ?

Servant.—This is Master Charudatta's chariot ; Mistress Vasantasena is mounted inside. She is being taken to the old garden Pushpakaranda for Charudatta's pastime.

Viraka.—( Approaching Chandanaka. ) The driver of this chariot says that it is Charudatta's chariot, that Vasantasena is in it, and that she is being taken to the old garden Pushpakaranda.

Chan.—Then let it pass.

Viraka.—Without inspection ?

Chan.—Quite so.

Viraka.—On whose trust ?

Chan.—On the trust of revered Charudatta.

6 Viraka.—Who is revered Charudatta, or who is Vasantasena, that the chariot should go without inspection ?

Chan.—Aye ? Don't you know the noble Charudatta nor Vasantasena ? If you don't know Charudatta nor Vasantasena, certainly you don't know even the moon in the sky, nor the noonlight.

Who does not know that moon of character, that lotus of virtues, that saviour of the helpless, and that gem which is the essence of the four oceans ? (13)

Two alone are the most respectful personages, the pride and ornament of the city, and they are Vasantasena of high nobility, and Charudatta, the store of virtue. (14)

Viraka.—Aye ! Chandanka !

I know Charudatta, as well as Vasantasena ; nay, I know them perfectly well. But when I am serving my king, I deem even my father as a stranger to me. (15)

Aryaka.—( To himself. ) The one is my past friend and the other is my past enemy. For see !

These two men are alike engaged in one and the same business ; nevertheless they are very unlike each other in their ways and dispositions as it is in the case of the two fires, one lit on marriage-occasions, and the other upon the funeral pyre. (16)

Chan.—You are a most careful captain that the king confides in. I shall keep the bullocks in restraint, and in the meanwhile you make the inspection, Viraka.—You, too, are a trusty commander of the king. Therefore make the inspection yourself.

Chan.—If I make the inspection, is it just the same as if you have made it ?

Viraka.—If you make the inspection, it is just the same as if King Palaka himself had made it.

Chan.—Raise up the yoke, man ! ( Vardha-manaka does so. )

Aryaka.—( To himself. ) What ! Are the watchmen to inspect me ? Ill fated I am ! I have no weapons with me.

Or, I shall imitate Bhimasena, and my arm shall be my weapon. It is better to die a fighting warrior, than a prisoner enchained. (17)

Rather, it is't yet occasion for using violence. ( Chandanaka enters the chariot and looks about. )

Aryaka.—I seek your protection,

Chan.—(Speaking in Sanskrit.) ~~He who seeks protection shall enjoy all security.~~

Aryaka.—The Goddess of Victory shall forsake him whoever deserts one that sought his protection; his friends and relatives shall abandon him, and he is ever exposed to ridicule and derision. (18)

Chan.—What! the herdsman Aryaka? He is like a bird that has fallen into the hands of a fowler, being frightened by a hawk.

(Reflecting.)—Here is an innocent man, who is mounted on Charudatta's chariot, and who seeks refuge with me. Besides, he is a friend of my good and benevolent Sarvilaka. On the other hand the king's orders are absolute. What will be proper for me to do under these circumstances? Let it happen, what may. At the very outset, I promised him security and protection.

If the person who ever finds a pleasure in doing good to others, promises protection to a frightened man, and thereby meets with ruin, that does not matter; for it is looked upon as a virtue, among the public (or, it adds to his fame).

(He gets down with fear.) I saw the gentleman—(interrupting himself.) No, I mean, the lady Vasantasena. She says:—"Is it proper, is it gentlemanly, to insult me on the high way, when I am going to visit the noble Charudatta?"

Viraka.—Chandanaka, I have my own doubts about the affair.

Chan.—Doubts? How so?

Viraka.—Out of fear, you gurgled in your excited throat, while you said "I saw the gentleman" and subsequently corrected yourself as "I saw the lady." (20)

Hence it is that I have doubts in the affair.

Chan.—Whence are thy doubts, man? We southerners, speak only indistinctly. We know the various dialects of various countries and barbarian races, as the Khashas, the Khattis, the Kadas, the Kadathobilas, the Karnatas, the Karnas, the Pravaranas, the Dravidas, the Cholas, the Chinas, the Barbaras, the Kheras, the Khanas, the Mukhas, the Madhughatas and all the rest of them. We speak freely either 'he' (आर्य) or 'she' (आर्या), न दृष्टे or दृष्ट.

Viraka.—I shall, also, have a look. It is the king's orders. And the king trusts in me.

Chan.—Does it turn out then that I am not to be trusted?

Viraka.—This is the king's business.

Chan.—( To himself. ) If it is said abroad that the young herdsman escaped in the chariot of the revered Charudatta, then the king would punish Charudatta. Therefore, what is the course that I am to pursue ? ( Reflecting. ) I shall stir up a quarrel as is the way of the people of the Karnatic. ( Aloud. ) Aye, Viraka, I, Chandanaka, inspected the carriage once; and now you want to inspect it again. Who are you to do so ?

Virakv.—Aye, who are you ?

Chan.—Honoured and respected as you are, you don't remember the nature of your lineage.

Viraka.—( Angrily ) Aye, what about my lineage ?

Chan.—Who is to speak of that !

Viraka.—Speak out, man.

Chan.—I had not better say that.

Even though I know of your birth, I shall not say that, in consideration of the greatness of your character. Let it be left to my heart alone; and what use is of breaking a wood-apple ? (21)

Viraka.—Speak out ! Speak !

( Chandanaka make a significant gesture. )

Viraka.—What does this gesture mean, man ?

Chan.—With a broken whetstone in the hand, you were won't to trim up the curding beards of men, and your hands were busy with scissors. And now, you are turned out the commander of the army. (22)

Viraka.—Chandanaka, respected as you are, you don't remember your lineage either.

Chan.—Aye ! What about the family I, Chandanaka, belong to and which is as pure as the moon ?

Viraka.—Who is to say of that ?

Chan.—Speak, speak ;

( Viraka makes a significant gesture. )

Chan.—What does this gesture mean, man ?

Viraka.—You, fellow, listen to me.

Indeed, your lineage is most pure. Your mother was a tabor, your father a kettledrum, and your brother, O harsh tongued one ! A tambourine. Now, you have turned out a commander of the army. (23)

Chan.—( Angrily. ) I, Chandanaka, a shoe-maker ? You better look inside the chariot.

Viraka.—You ; driver ! Turn the chariot around, I will look into it.

(The servant does so. Viraka starts to get into the chariot. Chandanaka seizes him violently by the hair, knocks him down and kicks him with his feet.)

Viraka.—(Rising with anger.) Fellow, while I was fearlessly executing the king's orders, you forcibly seized me by the hair, and kicked me with your feet. If I don't have you drawn and quartered in the middle of the Court, my name is not Viraka.

Chan.—Fellow, go to court or to the hall of Justice. What do I care for a dog like you?

Viraka.—Very well.

(Exit,)

Chan.—(Looking about in all directions.) Go on, driver, go on! If anybody questions you, tell him that the chariot goes after having been inspected by Chandanaka and Viraka. Mistress Vasantasena, let me give you this passport. (He gives a sword to Aryaka.)

Aryaka.—(Receiving the sword. Joyfully, to himself.)—Ah! I have got a weapon, my right arm too throbs, and everything is favourable to me. Oh, I am saved at last. (24)

Chan.—Now that I was introduced to you and was confided in, I believe, you will remember Chandanaka. I don't say this out of selfishness, but I utter this out of the true love.

Aryaka.—By God's will, I have made a friend of Chandanaka who is rich on account of his moonlike character. If ever the sayings of the soothsayers is to turn true, then I will not forget Chandanaka. (26)

Chan.—May Siva, Vishnu, Brahma, the Sun, and the Moon, give you protection, and slay all thy foes, as Parvati slew Sumbha and Nisumba. (27)

(Exit Vardhamanaka, with the chariot.)

Chan.—(Looking towards the stage.) Aye! As I left my house, my good friend Sarvilaka closely followed me, but departed somewhere. Well, I have made an enemy of Viraka, the chief commander and confidant of the king. So I, too had better follow him, with all my sons and brothers.

ACT VII.

—o—

( Then enter Charudatta and Maitreya. )

Vidushaka.—O, look at the state of the old garden Pushpakaranada !

Charudatta.—Quite so, my friend. For see !

The trees shine like merchants, the flowers constitute their saleable commodity, and the king's officers in the form of bees move about as if collecting taxes. (1)

Vid.—Pray be seated on this slab of stone which is charming without any decoration.

Cha.—( Seating himself. ) Vardamanaka lingers very long, my friend.

Vid.—I told Vardhamanaka to bring Vasantasena and come very quickly.

Cha.—Why then does he linger ?

Perhaps some chariot is slowly moving in front of him, and he waits till he finds room. Or perhaps, the axle is broken, and he has returned. Or perhaps, the rein is snapped, or perhaps the bath being obstructed by a block lying on business, he seeks another road. Or it may be that he slowly urges on the pair of the bulls, and is coming hither freely at ease. (2)

( Then enter Vardhamanaka driving the chariot, in which Aryaka lies hidden. )

Serv.—Go on, bullocks, go on !

Aryaka.—( To himself. )

[ I am exceedingly afraid of the sight of the king's officers and as the fetters still cling to my foot my escape isn't yet complete. I have got into the carriage of that noble personage without his knowledge, and I am going now therein, like a cuckoo protected by the female crows in their nest. (3) ]

Ah ! I have come a long distance from the city. Now, shall I get out of the chariot and penetrate into the recess of the grove ? Or shall I meet the master of this chariot ? Rather, what good is of a hiding place in the grove ? The worthy Charudatta is spoken of as being ever kind to those who seek his protection. I shall depart after meeting him face to face.

He, the noble one, will be most gratified to see me who am just rescued from the misfortune of captivity. This body which has attained this condition was saved by me through the virtues of that great man. (4)

Serv.—Here is the garden. I shall go in. (Going in.) Revered Maitreya !

Vid.—I shall inform you of good news, my friend. Vardhamanaka's voice is heard. Vasantasena should have come then.

Cha.—Good news. indeed.

Vid.—You, son of a slave, why are you so late ?

Serv.—Don't get angry, good Maitreya. I remembered that I had forgotten the cushions of the carriage, and I had to go back for these and that is why I am late.

Cha.—Turn the chariot around, Vardhamanaka. Friend Maitreya, help Vasantasena to get out of the chariot.

Vid.—What ! Has she fetters on her feet, so that she can't get out by herself ? (He rises and lifts the curtain of the chariot.) Why, this isn't mistress Vasantasena—this is mister Vasantasena.

Cha.—A truce to your jests, my friend. Love cannot endure delay. Rather, I will help her to get out of the chariot. (He rises up.)

Aryaka.—(Discovering him.) Ah ! Here is the master of the chariot ! He is not merely attractive to the ears, but also to the eyes. Thank heaven ! I am safe.

Cha.—(Entering the chariot and seeing Aryaka.) Who then is this ?

[His arms are long like the trunk of an elephant, his shoulders, are protuberant and brawny like the lion's, his chest is full and capacious, and his long eyes are copper red and restless. How could this noble one of such a graceful person bear a fetter clinging to his foot, so unworthy of his dignity ? (5) J

Who are you, sir ?

Aryaka.—I am one who seeks your protection ; I am Aryaka and by birth a herdsman.

Cha.—Are you he whom King Palaka brought from the hamlet and confined in prison ?

Aryaka.—Quite so.

Cha.—Fate has brought you hither within my sight. I may
M. 11-12.

rather give up my own life, but I shall not forsake you who has sought my portection. (6)

( Aryaka manifests his joy. )

Cha.—Vardhamanaka, remove the fetters from his foot.

Serv.—Yes, sir. (He does so.) Master, the fetters are removed.

Aryaka.—But you have bound me with yet stronger fetters of love.

Vid.—Now you put on the fetters yourself. He is liberated. We shall go.

Cha.—Peace ! For shame !

Aryaka.—Charudatta, my friend, I got into your chariot with a confidence in you. Therefore I beg to be excused.

Cha —I am really honoured by the fact that you have yourself entertained a confidence in me.

Arya.—If you permit it, I now desire to go.

Cha.—Go then.

Arya.—Well, I will alight from the chariot.

Cha.—No, my friend, you need not alight. The fetters have been removed of you only just now, and walking will be difficult for you. In this place where men freely move, the chariot will excite no suspicion. So you may go in the chariot itself.

Arya.—I thank you, sir.

Cha.—Auspicious be your way to join your kinsmen !

Arya.—Indeed I have found in you a kinsmen.

Cha.—I must be remembered in the course of conversation.

Arya.—Can one forget himself ?

Cha.—May gods protect you in your path !

Arya.—I am already protected by you.

Cha.—No, you have been saved by your good fortune.

Arya.—Really, you are the main cause thereof.

Cha.—Since King Palaka is roused, protection will be difficult so you must depart quickly.

Arya.—Yes. Only to meet again.

[Exit]

Cha.—Having committed this serious offence towards the king, it doesn't befit us to linger here even for a moment. Maitreya, throw the fetters into the old well, for kings are likely to watch others' deeds, through their spies.

( His left eye throbs. ) Maitreya, my friend, I am eager to see Vasantasena. See.

I have not met to-day the fair Vasantasena and my left eye throbs. My heart too is causelessly anxious, and is highly distressed.

— Come, let us go. ( He walks about. ) Oh ! A Buddhist mendicant is come, and his sight forebodes something ill. ( Reflecting. ) Let him enter by that path, while we shall depart by this.

ACT VIII.

— x —

[ Enter a Mendicant, with a wet garment in his hand. ]

Mendicant.—Ye, ignorant men, lay by a store of religious merit.

Restrain your appetite (belly), and be for ever vigilant with the help of the drum in the form of meditation. The senses are fraudulent, and will steal away (the treasure of) the religious merit that you have long hoarded. (1)

And also having observed the transient nature of everything in this world, I take refuge with virtue itself.

Whoever conquers his five senses, dispels the Neiscience, removes his egotism, and thus saves himself, shall most surely attain swarga. (2)

Why shave the head and face, when the mind itself is not shaved? On the other hand, he whose mind is shaved, has also his head and face well shaved. (3)

This garment has been dipped in red-coloured water. And now I will go into the garden of the king's brother-in-law, wash it in the pond therein, and come away very quickly. (He walks about and does so.) (A voice behind the scenes)! Stay, you wicked mendicant, stay!

Mendicant.—(Discovering the speaker. With fear). Heaven help me! Evidently, there comes Samsthanaka, the king's brother in-law. Just because one mendicant committed an offence now wherever he sees a mendicant, whether the same or not, he will bore, a hole in his nose and drive him round like a bullock. Where will a forlorn person take refuge? Or rather the Lord Buddha alone is my refuge.

[Enter Vita with a sword, and Samsthanaka.]

Sak.—Stay, you wicked mendicant, stay! I will pound your head like a red radish at a banquet. (He strikes him.)

Vita.—You son of an unmarried woman, it is not proper for you to beat this mendicant who, having renounced everything, is in yellow robes. What have you to do with him? Look rather at this garden, which offers itself to pleasure.

It does most noble and serviceable acts, by means of its forest trees which afford joy and shelter to the forlorn; like a newly founded realm, it is an unclaimed object of enjoyment.

Men.—Welcome. Be merciful, you worshipper of Buddha.

Sak.—Hear, hear, friend. He is insulting me.

Vita.—What does he say?

Sak.—He says I am a servant, Am I a barber?

Vita.—He praises you as being the worshipper of Buddha.

Sak.—Praise me, mendicant, praise me.

Men.—You are blessed. You are holy.

Sak.—Friend, he says, I am dhanya and punya Am I a materialistic philosopher? A water-trough? Or a pot-maker?

Vita.—You son of an unmarried woman, he praises you by saying that you are virtuous and that you are holy.

Sak.—Friend, what did he come here for!

Men.—To wash this garment.

Sak.—You wicked mendicant! This garden, Pushpakaranda, was given me by my sister's husband, and it is the finest of all gardens. Dogs and jackals drink the water in this pond. I am a high personage, I am a great man, and I don't even take a bath. And here in this pond, you bring your stinking and dirty (dark like a कलिय preparation) clothes, and wash them! I shall, therefore, make a short work of you, with a single stroke.

Vita.—You son of an unmarried woman I infer he must have not been long a mendicant.

Sak.—~~But~~ <sup>How</sup> does my friend make it out?

Vita.—What is there to make out? See!

His forehead wears a brilliant hue, as his hair was only newly shorn. The rough garment being worn only very short time before no scar is yet made on his shoulder. He doesn't sufficiently know how to dye his robes red. On account of the length of the garment, its skirit hangs loosely and doesn't cling tight to the shoulders. (5)

Men.—True, worshipper of Buddha, I have been a mendicant but a short time before.

Sak.—Then why haven't you been a medicant from the time when you were just born! (He beats him.)

Men.—Buddha be praised!

Vita.—What do you mean, by beating this poor mendicant? Leave him. Let him go.

Sak.—Aye, just wait a minute, while I take counsel.

Vita.—With whom?

Sak.—With my own heart.

Vita.—Alas! He shall never go.

Sak.—Blessed little heart, my little son and master, shall the mendicant go or shall he stay? (To himself.) He shall neither go, nor shall he stay. (Aloud) Well, friend. I took counsel with my heart, and this my heart says.

Vita.—Says what?

Sak.—He shall neither go, nor stay. He shall neither breathe in, nor breathe out. He shall fall down here immediately, and let him die.

Men.—Buddha be praised! I throw myself upon your protection.

Vita.—Let him go.

Sak.—Well, on one condition.

Vita.—And what is that?

Sak.—He must fling away mud alone, without making the water turbid. Or better yet, he must collect the (drinkable) water alone, and throw aside the mud.

Vita.—What a stupidity this is!

This earth is groaning under the weight of fools (like him), whose thoughts and deeds are all overturned, and who are, so to speak, trees of flesh, or images made of stone. (6)

(The Mendicant censures him by signs.)

Sak.—What does he mean?

Vita.—He praises you.

Sak.—Praise me, praise me! Praise me again!

(The Mendicant does so, and then exit.)

Vita.—You son of an unmarried woman, mark the beauty of this garden!

These trees, that are lovely on account of fruits and flowers, and over which full-grown and steady creepers cling and interlace, and which are guarded by watchmen at the king's command, these enjoy a happiness similar unto that which is enjoyed by men possessed of wives. (7)

Sak.—My friend speaks quite appropriately.

The ground is highly ornamented with various flowers that have fallen down. And the trees are bent low under the weight of flowers; and the monkeys, hanging from the creepers at the tops of trees, sport about like jack-fruit. (8)

Vita.—You, son of an unmarried woman, please be seated in the middle of this slab of stone.

Ska.—Well, I have taken my seat. (He sits with Vita.)

Friend, I remember that Vasantasena even yet. Like the words of a wicked man, she does not go out of my heart.

Vita.—( To himself. ) Even though repulsed by her, he yet remembers her. For indeed:—

The sentiment of love in mean-minded men increases all the more, when they are spurned by women ( they desire ). But a noble man's passion gets either diminished, under such circumstances, or vanishes altogether. (9)

Sak.—Friend, long time has passed, since I told my servant Sthavaraka to drive my chariot and come here very quickly. And even yet he is not come. I have been hungry from a long time, and it is not possible for one to go a-foot in the midday.

The sun has attained the zenith of the sky and he is hard to look at as an angry ape. The earth is hard distressed. ( i. e., scorched, ) like Gandhari whose hundred sons were killed. ( 10 )

Vita.—True.

The herd of cattle lies drowsing in the shade, letting fall the mouthfuls of fodder. The deer in the forests, suffering from thirst, drink the waters, though heated, of the pool. The highway is not traversed by men out of fear of sunstroke. So I think the chariot is stopped at some shady place having been turned aside from the heated ground. (11)

Sak.—Sir.

The rays of the sun find shelter on my head; birds, flying creatures, also sky rangers shelter themselves amidst the branches of trees; and men, people and persons breathe hard and hot, and lying in their homes as, their sole refuge endure the heat of the day. (12)

Sir, the servant is not come even yet. I shall be singing in the meanwhile just to delight myself. ( He sings. ) Friend, did you hear what I sang ?

Vita.—What shall I say ? You are verily a Gandharva !

Sak.—Why shouldn't I be a Gandharva ?

When it is a fact that I take to mixture of perfumes, like asafoetida, cummin, ginger, orris, and treacle, why should my voice be other than remarkably melodious ? (13)

Well, sir, I shall just sing again. ( He does so. ) Sir, did you hear what I sang ?

Vita.—What shall I say ? You are verily a Gandharva !

Sak.—Why shouldn't I be a Gandharva ?

I always feed upon the flesh of the cuckoo, well-seasoned with asafoetida, and pepper powder, and fried in oil and especially in clarified butter. When such is the case, why should my voice be other than remarkably melodious ?

Sir, the servant is not come even yet.

Vita.—Be easy in your mind. He will be here presently.

[ Then enter Vasanasena mounted in the chariot, and the servant. ]

Servant.—I am afraid. The sun has attained the middle of the horizon. Will not Samstanaka, the king's brother-in-law be very angry now ? Therefore, I shall drive faster. Run on, bullocks, go on.

Vas.—Alas ! Alas ! Really, this is not Vardhamanaka's voice. What can this mean ? Can it be that the worthy Charudatta, fearing that the bullocks might become weary, sent another man with another chariot ? My right eye, again, throbs. My heart is all a-tremble. There is no one in sight. Everything seems to dance before my eyes.

Sak.—( Hearing the sound of wheels. ) Friend, friend, the chariot is come.

Vita.—How do you know ?

Sak.—Doesn't my friend see ? It squeaks like an old hog.

Vita.—( Observing. ) I quite perceive it. It is come.

Sak.—Sthavaraka, my little son, my servant, are you come ?

Serv.—Yes, sir.

Sak.—Is the chariot also come ?

Serv.—Yes, sir,

Sak.—Are the bullocks also come ?

Serv.—Yes, sir.

Sak.—And are you come also ?

Serv.—( Laughing. ) Yes, master. I am also come.

Sak.—Then drive the chariot in.

Serv.—By which road ?

Sak.—Through this fracture in the wall.

Serv.—Oh, master, the bullocks will be killed. The cart will go to pieces. And, I, your servant shall also be killed.

Sak.—I am the king's brother-in-law, man. If the bullocks are dead, I shall buy new ones. If the cart is to go to pieces, I will have another one made. If you are dead, there shall come another driver of the chariot.

Serv.—Really, everything will be replaced, but only I will not be able to replace myself.

Sak.—Aye, fellow, let everything go to ruin. You shall drive the chariot over the fractured wall.

Serv.—Let the chariot go to pieces, let the master go himself to ruin along with it. Let there be a new chariot. I shall go to the master and inform him. (He drives in.) What! Not broken? Master, here is come your chariot.

Sak.—Are not the bullocks split in two? Are not the ropes dead? And aren't you killed?

Serv.—No, sir.

Sak.—Come, sir. Let us look at the chariot. Sir, you are my preceptor, my great preceptor. You look as if you are desirous of being treated with respect, from a consideration of the fact that I am your intimate friend, and that I bear an affection towards you. So you better mount the chariot before me.

Vita.—Very well. (He starts to do so.)

Sak.—No, no, you better stay. Is this your father's cart, that you should mount on it first? I am the owner of the chariot, and so I will enter it first.

Vita.—It is only you that asked me to mount on the chariot first, and I did so accordingly.

Sak.—Even if I were to say so, you are to say out of courtesy, "You better enter first, master."

Vita.—You better then enter the chariot, sir.

Sak.—Now I will enter. Sthavaraka, my little son, my servant turn the chariot around.

Serv.—(Does so.) Enter, master.

Sak.—(Enters and looks about, then hastily gets down in terror, and clings to the neck of Vita.)

Sir, sir, you are dead, you are dead. There is a female demon or a thief that is mounted on the chariot and lives therein. If it is a female demon, then we both are robbed. If it is thief, then we both are devoured.

Vita.—Let there be no fear. How could a female demon travel in a bullock-conveyance? Perhaps your eyes were blinded with the glare of the midday-sun, and hence arose this hallucination, when you saw the shadow of Sthavaraka with the smock on it.

Sak.—Sthavarak, my tittle son, my slave, are you alive?

Serv.—Yes, sir.

Sak.—Sir, there lives a woman in the chariot, mounted on it. You better see that.

Vita.—What! A woman?

Like bulls whose eyes are obstructed by torrents of rain, let us bow our heads and wend our way quickly. My eyes are afraid of gazing on high-born dames, since I am desirous of being esteemed in public places. (15)

Vas.—(With amazement. To himself.) What! It is that king's brother-in-law, whom it is painful for me to gaze at. Alas! Unfortunate I am! My life is in peril. My coming hither has proved as fruitless as the sowing of a handful of seeds on a barren spot of saline soil. What shall I do now?

Sak.—This old servant is evidently very much frightened, and so he won't look into the chariot. So you better look into the chariot, sir.

Vita.—What harm is there in it? Very well I will do it.

Sak.—What! Jackals are flying in the air, crows are walking on all fours! While the demon is chewing my friend with her eyes, and looking at him with her teeth I will make my escape.

Vita.—(Recognizing Vasantasena. Sadly to himself.) What! The deer goes after the tiger! Alas!

The female swan, abandoning her mate who is bright and lovely like the autumnal moon, and who is reclining on the white river sands, has come here seeking after a common crow. (16)

(Aside to Vasantasena.) Vasantasena, this isn't proper. It isn't worthy of you.

Your feeling of self-dignity rejected him before, and now for gold, and at the importunity of your mother:—

Vas.—No! (She shakes her head.)

Vita.—He is esteemed and honoured consistently with the mean disposition that characterizes the living of a prostitute. (17)

I did tell you before—"Serve equally the man you love and him you hate."

Vas.—I came hither, by some erroneous interchange of chariot. I seek refuge with you.

Vita.—Don't fear. Don't fear. Very well, I shall deceive him. (Approaching Sakara.) You son of an unmarried woman, it is really a female demon that lives here.

Sak.—Sir, sir, if a female demon is living there, why are you not robbed? And if it is a thief, why are you not eaten up?

Vita.—What is the purpose in demonstrating all that? What harm is there, if we should go back to the city of Ujjayini, walking a foot under the shady row of trees in the gardens?

Sak.—And if we did so, what then?

Vita.—If we were to do so, we would have some exercise, and moreover we would avoid giving trouble to the bullocks.

Sak.—All right then. Sthavaraka, my servant, drive on the chariot. No! No! stop, stop! I will go on foot before the gods and Brahmans? No! No! I will go mounted on the chariot, so that people will say, seeing me from afar, "There he goes, our master, the king's brother-in-law."

Vita.—( To himself. ) It is hard to convert poison into a medicine. So be it, then. ( Aloud. ) You, son of an unmarried woman, this is Vasantasena who has come to meet you. vasantasena

Vas.—Heaven forbid!

Sak.—( With great joy. ) Ah! To meet me, a high personage, and a regular Vasudeva?

Vita.—Exactly so.

Sak.—Then I have attained an unprecedented fortune. That other time I greatly offended her, and now I will fall at her feet and pacify her.

Vita.—You have spoken quite well.

Sak.—I shall now fall at her feet. ( Approaching Vasantasena. ) My little mother, my dear mamma, please listen to my respectful solicitation.

I fold my hands and fall at thy feet, O broad-eyed lady. Thy teeth are neat and clean, and thy finger-nails are ten. Whatever offence I have done unto you in the over-anxiety of my love, I have done here pacification for all that. I am your slave and I am at your entire disposal. (18)

Vas.—( Angrily. ) Begone! You speak what is base and unworthy. ( She spurs him with her foot. )

Sak.—( Angrily. )

This head which my mother and mamma caressed and kissed, and which bowed not even to worship the gods, has been kicked at with feet, like the carrion by the jackals in the forest. (19)

Aye, Sthavaraka, you servant, where did you meet with her?

Serv.—Master, the highway was blocked by villagers' waggons. So I stopped my chariot in Charudatta's orchard, and getting out of it, I helped in turning the wheels of the carts so as to clear my way. In the meanwhile, I suppose, she mistook this chariot, for another, and had mounted in.

Sak.—Oh! She came here because she mistook my chariot for another? and didn't come to meet me? Well, get out of my chariot, get out. You are going after the poor merchant's son, and my bulls to take you! Get down, you born slave! Get down, get down, and down!

Vas.—Truly I am honoured by your words that I go after the worthy Charudatta. Now what must happen, let it may.

Sak.—With these hands circumferenced by ten lotuslike nails, and greedy for striking, as if in sport, I shall drag thy beautiful body by the hair, from my carriage, as Jatayu did the bride of Vali. (20)

Vita.—Virtuous ladies possessed of excellent merits are not to be caught by the hair and humiliated. The creepers grown in pleasure-gardens do not deserve to be violently deprived of their sprout. (21)

So stand up, man. I shall help her to alight from the chariot. Vasantasena, please come down.

(Vasantasena alights and stands apart.)

Sak.—(To himself.) The fire of anger was enkindled when she rejected my words and now it has blazed-up because she kicked at me with her feet. So now I will murder her. Let it be so, then. (Aloud.) Sir, sir.

If you do desire to have a garment with broad and hanging fringes, and a hundred tassels, or if you desire to relish sweet flesh and derive satisfaction then, making the sound "Chuhoo, chuhoo, chukku, chuhoo, chuhoo," (22)

Vita.—What then?

Sak.—You shall do what will be pleasing to me.

Vita.—I shall certainly do it, unless it be a sin.

Sak.—Sir, there is not even the smell of a sinful task therein. There is no female demon.

Vita.—Speak then.

Sak.—Murder Vasantasena.

Vita.—(Shutting his ears.) She is a young damsel and the ornament of the city: she is a courtesan and nevertheless her spirit of love and her courtesy are unlike that of a prostitute: moreover she is entirely free from blame. If I should kill such a lady, then with what raft shall I cross the river of the future world? (23)

Sak.—I will give you a boat. And besides, in this lonely garden, who will see you murdering her?

Vita.—The ten quarters of the sky, the sylvan deities, the moon, the blazing-rayed Lord of the day, Dharma (virtue), the wind, the sky, likewise my inmost soul, these all do see me, as well as the earth that ever bears testimony to noble and sinful deeds. (24)

Sak.—Well then, murder her covered under the end of your cloak.

Vita.—Fool ! You are a vile wretch.

Sak.—This old hog is afraid of sin. Well, I shall prevail upon Sthavaraka, my servant, to do it. Sthavaraka, my little son, my servant, I will give you golden bracelets.

Serv.—I too shall wear them.

Sak.—I will have a golden seat made for you.

Serv.—I too shall sit on it.

Sak.—I will give you all the leavings of my food.

Serv.—I too shall devour them.

Sak.—I will make you the chief of all my servants.

Serv.—Master, I will be the chief.

Sak.—Then, you shall act up to my words.

Serv.—Master, I will do anything, unless it be a sin.

Sak.—There is not even the smell of a difficult task in it.

Serv.—Then speak out, master.

Sak.—Murder this lady Vasantasena.

Serv.—Oh, master, be pacified ! The worthy lady has been brought hither by me, a sinner, because she mistook this chariot for another.

Sak.—Aye, servant, am I not your master ?

Serv.—Master of my body, and not of my character. So be pacified, master, be pacified ! I am really afraid.

Sak.—You being my servant, whom are you afraid of ?

Serv.—Of the other world, master.

Sak.—What is this other world ?

Serv.—Master, it is the ripening of righteousness and sin.

Sak.—What does righteousness ripen into ?

Serv.—Into the state of being, like my master, adorned with various golden ornaments.

Sak.—How does it culminate in ?

Serv.—In the state of being, like me, a eater of another's food. So I will do no sinful act.

Sak.—Aye, you won't murder her ? (He strikes him by several means.)

Serv.—You may beat me, master. You may kill me, master. I will do no sinful deed.

By force of my ill-luck, I am already made a born slave ; and further misery I shall not buy. So I avoid a sinful deed. (25)

Vas.—Sir, I throw myself upon your protection.

Vita.—You son of an unmarried woman, be pacified, be pacified ! Well done, Sthavaraka !

Lo ! Even this poor slave, merged in the most despised condition of life, seeks virtue's meed beyond the grave, but his master does not. Then why do not such creatures go to instant ruin who multiply sin and abandon virtue ? (26)

And again.

Fate will ever be searching for weak points and is iniquitous since he is a slave, and you are a lord, and since he does not enjoy your wealth nor you obey his word. (27)

Sak.—( To himself. ) This is an old jackal, afraid of sin and this is a born-slave afraid of the other world. I am the king's brother-in-law, and I am an excellent personage. So whom am I afraid of ? ( Aloud. ) Well, servant, you born-slave, go away. Enter any screened place and remain alone.

Serv.—Yes, master. ( Approaching Vasantasena. ) Madam, this is all my power. ( Exit. )

Sak.—( Girds up his loins. ) Stay, Vasantasena ; stay, I am going to murder you.

Vita.—You will kill her in my very presence ? ( He seizes him by the throat. )

Sak.—( Falls to the ground. ) Sir, you are murdering your master. ( He loses consciousness, but again recovers. )

Ever and anon you were nourished by me with meat and clarified butter, but now when your assistance is needed, you have become my foe. (28)

( Reflecting. ) Good ! I have now found a way. The old jackal has given her a hint by shaking his head at her. So I will send him away, and then I will murder Vasantasena. Let it be so, then. ( Aloud. ) I was born of a noble family big as a Jasmine leaf. How could I do that sin I spoke about ? I just said so to make her receive me.

Vita.—What is the use of speaking of your noble birth ? It is character alone that is the best criterion in this respect. Thorns grow abundantly on a fertile soil, too. (29)

Sak.—Sir, she is bashful in your presence, and she doesn't therefore confess her love to me. Therefore, please go. Moreover Sthavaraka went away, after receiving a blow from me. He is running away. Hence, catch him, sir, and come back.

Vita.—( To himself. ) Perhaps Vasantasena, possessed of much self dignity, may not entertain this fool in our presence. So I shall create privacy for her for the essence of love consists in familiarity due to solitude. (30) ( Aloud. )—Very well. I shall go.

Vas.—( Seizing the hem of his garment. ) Did I not throw myself on your protection ?

Vita.—Don't fear, Vasantasena. do not fear. You, son of an unmarried woman, Vasantasena is a pledge committed to your hand.

Sak.—All right. Let her be committed to my hand as a pledge.

Vita.—Are you speaking the truth ?

Sak.—True.

Vita.—( Going a few steps. ) Or rather, if I were to go away, the cruel wretch might kill her. I will conceal myself for a time, and observe what he intends to do. ( He remains in a retired place. )

Sak.—Good ! I will murder her. Or rather this crafty and cunning man, the old jackal, this Brahman has gone and hidden himself and will cheat me like the jackal he is. I will just do this in order to deceive him- ( He gathers flowers and adorns himself therewith ), Vasantasena, my love, my love ; Come !

Vita.—Yes, he has turned a lover, Good ! I am free from anxiety. I shall go. ( Exit. )

Sak.—I give you gold. I speak to you affectionately, and I fall at your feet with my head that wears a turban, Nevertheless, you do not love me, O beautiful-teethed lady ! Are we in your eyes, men made merely of wood ? ( 33 )

Vas.—What doubt is there ? ( She bends her head down, and repeats the following verses. )

You are a man of wicked deeds, you are the basest of human beings, and you are a guilty sinner. Why do you allure me with your base gold ? The honey-loving bees never abandon the pure and stainless lotus flower. ( 32 )

A personage of high birth and character, even though very poor is to be resorted to with a good deal of effort ; and it is the glory of a courtesan to set her love on a personage befitting her. ( 23 )

Having served the mango-tree, I will not make up my mind to serve the Palasa tree, Sak.—O, slave-wench ! You make that poor Charudatta a mango tree, while you call me a palasa tree. You make me not even Kimshuka tree. Thus you use abusive language in respect of me, and even yet you affectionately remember Charudatta.

Vas.—How is he not to be remembered, who dwells in my heart ?

Sak.—This very minute, I shall kill him who dwells in your heart, and you too. Remain awhile, you poor merchant man's love!

Vas.—Oh speak, oh speak again those words that are deserving of being highly honoured.

Sak.—Let that poor Charudatta, the son of a slave rescue you now!

Vas.—I shall be rescued, if he only sees me.

Sak.—Is he Indra, the son of Vali, Mahendra, son of Rambha, Kalanemi, Subandhu, King Rudra, Son of Drona, Jatayu, Chanakya, Dhundhumara, or Trisanku? (34)

But even if he were to be any of these he could not rescue you. As Sita was killed by Chanakya in the Bharata age, so I will kill you, as Jatayu did Draupadi. (35)

(He makes an effort to strike her.)

Vas.—Ah mother! Where are you? O Charudatta, here I die without having the longing of heart fulfilled. I will cry out for help. No! It is rather shameful that Vasantasena should cry for help. Bow to Charudatta!

Sak.—Does the slave girl speak out that rescuer's name even yet? (He seizes her by the throat and presses it.) Remember him; wench, remember him.

Vas.—Hail to Charudatta!

Sak.—Die, wench! (He strangles her. Vasantasena loses consciousness and falls motionless.)

Sak.—(With great joy.)

I have murdered this vile lady who is the receptacle of all vice, the seat of all impudence, who had come here out of love for a poor man, and who falls into my hands as if in jaws of Death. What shall I say of the valour of my arms? She has lost her breath and she is dead like Sita in the Bharata. (36)

The courtesan girl would not love me even though I loved her; so I killed her in resentment. Seeing that the garden Pushpakaranda is lonely, I quickly strangled her to death. That brother of mine, my father as well as my mother like Draupadi have been deceived being unable to witness my heroic exploit to day. (37)

Well, the old jackal will return here now. So I will step aside and wait. (He does so.)

(Enter Vita, with Sthavaraka.)

Vita.—Sthavaraka, the servant has been persuaded by me to come back, and I will see that son of an unmarried woman. (He walks about and looks around him. ) Lo ! A tree has fallen on the path and has killed a woman in its fall. O ! sinner, why have you done this wicked act ? When I see that a woman was slain by thy fall, O ! sinner, we are also brought to ruin. This is an evil omen ; and now as a matter of fact I begin to apprehend of the safety of Vasantasena. The gods shall ever do what is good. ( Approaching Sakara. ) You son of an unmarried woman, here I have persuaded Sthavaraka. your servant. to come back.

Sak.—Welcome, sir, little son, Sthavaraka, my servant, welcome to you, also.

Serv.—Yes, sir.

Vita.—Restore me my pledge.

Sak.—What pledge ?

Vita.—Vasantasena.

Sak.—She is gone.

Vita.—Where.

Sak.—She has gone only after you, sir.

Vita.—( Doubtfully. ) No, she did not go in that direction.

Sak.—In what direction did you go ?

Vita.—Towards the east.

Sak.—Well, she went south.

Vita.—I come from the south.

Sak.—She went north.

Vita.—Why do you talk very much agitated ? My heart does not get satisfied. Therefore, speak the truth.

Sak.—Sir, I swear by your head, and by my own feet. Now compose your heart. She has been murdered by me.

Vita.—( With dejection, ) You really killed her ?

Sak.—If you don't believe my words, then behold the first heroic deed of Samsthanaka, the king's brother-in-law. ( He points out the body. )

Vita.—Alas ! unfortunate I am ! I am undone. ( He falls in a swoon )

Sak.—Hee, hee ! The gentleman is dead !

Serv.—Oh, sir ! Come to yourself ! I am the principal murderer for I brought the chariot hither, without looking into it.

Vita.—( Coming to himself. With feelings of pity. ) Alas, Vasantasena !

The stream of courtesy is dried up ; Rati has returned to her own abode. Alas ! Alas ! You were the ornament of ornaments,
M. 13-14.

O beautiful-faced lady: it was you that made the amorous sport itself resplendent. Ah! You were the stream of goodness, the isle of mirth. Alas! You were the retreat and support of men like me. Alas! Alas! The market of Cupid, which is the seat of the commodity of beauty is gone, gone for ever. (38) (Shedding tears.)—Alas! Alas!

What was the purpose for which this sinful deed was committed by you? By you who are sin incarnate has been laid low the innocent beauty of the whole city. (39)

(To himself.)—Ah! Perhaps, this sinful wretch may attribute this sinful deed to me. Well, I shall go away from this place. (He walks about.)

(Sakara approaches and holds him back.)

Vita.—You, sinful wretch, don't touch me. I have had enough of you. I shall go now.

Sak.—Aye, you yourself murdered Vasantasena, and where do you run away now, scandalizing me? So a man like me hasn't anyhody to protect him.

Vita.—You are an accursed wretch.

Sak.—I will give you money and hundreds of suvarnas clothes and a turban. And so let this great deed of valour which is of the nature of a crime be a common property (and not applicable to me alone). (40)

Vita.—A curse upon you! It shall be yours and yours alone.

Serv.—Heaven forbid!

Sak.—(Laughs).

Vita.—Let there be enmity between us; cease your laughter; damned be thy friendship which is very disgraceful and alike ignoble. Let me have no more any connection with you, I abandon thee who art devoid of all merits, like a broken, and stringless bow. (41)

Sak.—Sir, be pacified, be pacified. Come! Let us plunge into the pond and play therein.

Vita.—Even though I am innocent (not fallen low), this world shall consider me a sinner in as much as I am serving thee who art a sinful and vile wretch. How can I again follow thee, who art the murderer of women, and who art looked at with half-closed eyes, in great apprehension, by the women of the city? (42)

(With feelings of pity)—Vasantasena!

O! fair lady, be not born a courtesan, in your re-birth also, May you be born in some pure stainless family, that is remarkable for its high excellences, and conduct! (43)

Sak.—Having murdered Vasantasena, in my old garden Pushpakaranda, where do you flee away now? Come, defend yourself in court before my sister's husband. (He holds him back.)

Vita.—Aye, hold back, you accursed scoundrel! (He draws his sword.)

Sak.—(Recoiling in terror) Aya, you are afraid? Go, then.

Vita.—(To himself) It would be improper to remain here any longer. Well, I shall go to the place where the worthy Sarvilaka, Chandanaka and others remain. (Exit.)

Sak.—Go to ruin. Well, my little son, Sthavaraka, what kind of a thing is this that I have done?

Serv.—Master, you have committed a terrible crime.

Sak.—Aye, servant, do you say that I have committed a crime. Well, let this be so. (Taking various ornaments from his person,) Receive these ornaments. I have given these to you, so long as I shall be wearing them, they shall be mine; on other occasions they shall be yours.

Serv.—These shine best, worn by my master alone. What have I to do with them?

Sak.—Go along! Lead these bullocks, and wait in the tower of my palace, until I come back.

Serv.—Yes, master,

(Exit.)

Sak.—The gentleman has disappeared, in order to save himself. And I will put the servant, too, in chains in the palace tower, and keep him there. Thus the secret will be safe. Now I will go. But I shall have first a look at her. Is she dead, or shall I murder her again? (Looking at Vasantasena.) Oh! She is quite dead! Well, I shall cover her with this garment. No, it is marked by my name. Then some noble personage might recognize it. Good! I shall cover her with the dry leaves that have been blown into a heap by the wind. (He does so and then reflects awhile) Good! I will do it this way. I will go to court at once and lodge a complaint, that the merchant Charudatta enticed Vasantasena into my old garden Pushpakaranda, and killed her for the sake of wealth.

For the destruction of Charudatta, I shall invent a new and fraudulent plan—a plan which is cruel as the killing of a cow in a pure and virtuous city. (44)

Good! I shall go. (He starts to go, but perceives with fear.) Oh! In whatever direction I go there, too, comes this wicked mendicant, in his yellow wet cloak. I once bored a rope in his nose and drove him around. He bears enmity towards me. if by chance he sees me, he will proclaim to the world that I have murdered her. How can I, therefore escape! (Looking about.) Well, I will jump over this wall, just where it is half fallen down, and escape.

Thus I hurry on, run on, as Mahendra, when bound to the city of Lanka, hastened his march over the earth, in the sky, the nether regions, and on the summit of Hanuman. (45) (Exit.)

[Enter hurriedly the Buddhist monk, the old Samvahaka.]

Mendicant (Samvahaka) I have washed this torn mantle garment of mine. Why should I not let it dry on a branch? Here the monkeys will tear them. Why not on the ground? It will be made dirty, again, by the dust. Then where shall I spread it to get it dry? (Looking about.) Well, I will spread it over this collection of dry leaves blown into a heap by the wind (He does so.) I bow unto Buddha! (He sits down.) Well, I shall repeat the holy words of faith. (He repeats as said before "Who slays the five men.....") Or rather what have I to do with heaven, till I have not returned the act of kindness done to me by the worthy lady Vasantasena, the worshipper of Buddha. I was freed by her from the gamblers by a payment of ten suvarnas, and since then I regard myself as purchased by her. (Looking about.) What can it be that makes a deep sigh amidst the leaves? Rather it will be this.

The leaves, parched up by wind and heat, get moistened now by the moisture of my garment, and so, I believe, the scattered leaves curl up like other leaves. (46)

(Vasantasena regains her consciousness, and stretches out her hand)

Men.—Ah, there appears a woman's hand, adorned with beautiful ornaments. What! a second hand also? (He examines in several ways.) I recognize this hand, it appears. Rather, what is there to doubt of it? Surely, this is the hand that gave me protection. Well, I shall see. (He uncovers the body, looks at it, and recognizes it.) Evidently, it is she, the worshipper of Buddha. (Vasantasena pants for water.) Ah, she seeks water, and the pond is far away. What shall I do now? Well, I will hold this garment over her and let it drip. (He does so.)

(Vasantasena recovers consciousness, and raises herself.)

The monk fans her with the end of his garment. )

Vas.—Who are you, sir?

Men.—Don't you remember me, O worshipper of Buddha, whom you bought by a payment of ten suvarnas?

Vas.—I remember, but not just as you say. It is better that I were dead.

Men.—O, worshipper of Buddha, why is it ?

Vas.—( With feelings of despair. ) Because it is quite he fitting the profession of a courtesan.

Men.—O, worshipper of Buddha, support yourself by this creeper that remains near the tree, and stand on your feet. ( He bends down the creeper. )

( Vasantasena takes hold of it and rises. )

Men.—In yonder monastery dwells one who is my sister in the faith. There the worshipper of Buddha shall be restored ( to the peace of her mind ) before she would return home. You, worshipper of Buddha, walk slowly and slowly. He walks about and looks around him. ) Make way, worthy sirs, make way ! This is an young lady, I am a mendicant, and my virtuous conduct is above all reproach.

He alone is a man indeed, who has complete control over his hands, and mouth, and who restrains his organs of sense. What can the kings do as against him, for in his hand firmly lies the attainment of happiness in the world (47) [ Exeunt ]

ACT IX.

( Then enter a beadle. )

Beadle.—The Judge has ordered me—"Aye, beadle, go to the court-room and make ready the seats." So I now go to keep ready everything in the court room. ( He walks about and looks around him. ) Here is the court-room. I will now enter. ( He enters, sweeps, and places the seats. ) I have cleansed the court-room, and I have kept the seats quite ready. And now I will tell the magistrates. ( He walks about and looks around him. ) What! Here comes in this very direction the wicked and cruel man, the brother-in-law of the king. I will go away, avoiding his range of sight. ( He remains in a retired place. )

( Then enter Sakara in a gorgeous apparel )

Sak.—Like a Gandharva, I have bathed in pure waters, seated in the pleasure-garden of the house, amidst young ladies, and with limbs neatly decorated. (1)

Now I tie my hair, then twist them into a braid; I now loosen them into flowing tresses, and then gather them upwards into a graceful knot. Thus, I the king's brother-in-law am a wonder, and a great wondrous thing. (2)

And besides I have found a big hole, similar to the one obtained by a worm searching for one, having entered into the interior of the knot of the fibrous lotus stalk. Now, on whom shall I lay blame of the wicked deed? ( Recollecting. ) Ah. I remember now! In respect of this wicked deed, I would lay the charge as against the poor Charudatta. Besides, he is indeed, a poor man, and everything would be considered possible so far as he is concerned, Good! I will be the first to enter the court-room and lodge a complaint that Charudatta strangled Vasantasena, and murdered her. So now I shall go direct to the court-room. ( He walks about and looks around him. ) Here is the court-room. I will go in. ( Entering and looking about. ) What! The seats are all quite arranged! Before long the judges shall come here. I will be just sitting in the grassy quadrangular region, and will wait for them. ( He does so. )

Beadle.—( Walking about in another direction, and looking before him. ) Here comes the judge I will then approach him, ( He does so. )

( Enter the judge accompanied by the gild-president, scribes, and others )

Judge.—Gild-president ! Clerk !

Guild-president and Clerk. We await your bidding.

Judge.—Judicial trial, indeed, depends to such an extent upon others that it is really very difficult for the judges to penetrate into the hearts of others, and read their thoughts.

Men put forth deeds that are devoid of righteousness, and that are kept secret. Overcome with feelings of their own interest, they speak of no offence of their own in the court of justice. The king is assailed by the various offences, exaggerated by both the litigating parties. In short, censure is very easy to earn by a judge, while the chances of his being praised are far and few. (3)

And again :

Men, in their anger, devoid of all equity often point to crimes committed in secrecy, but they never speak of their own faults before the tribunal. Even the really virtuous, and innocent people, and those who sinned with the plaintiff and the defendant too, all alike suffer indeed. In short, censure is very easy for a judge to earn, but the chances of his being praised are far and few. (4)

For :

A Judge should be learned, and skilled in tracing fraud ; he must be eloquent, and dispassionate, and must show equal grace to friend, foe, and kinsmen ; he must pronounce his judgments only after due investigation, he must defend the weak and punish the knave ; he mustn't swerve from the path of virtue nor must he be avaricious. He must sincerely set his heart on discovering the absolute truth, and at the same time avoid the anger of the king. (5) ( Gild-president and clerk. ) Do men speak at all, defects in your lordship, amidst your virtues ? If so, then, they speak of darkness in the moonlight.

Judge.—My good beadle, direct me the way to the court of justice.

Beadle.—Come along, your honor, come along.

( They walk about. ) Here is the court of justice. May the magistrates be pleased to enter. ( All enter. )

Judge.—My good beadle, go outside, and learn who are these that desire to institute a case.

Beadle.—Yes, sir. ( He goes out. ) Gentlemen, the Judges ask if there is any who desires to institute a case.

Sak.—( With great joy. ) The judges are here. ( Struts about proudly.) I am an excellent personage, a man, a Vasudeva, the brother-in-law of the king, the royal brother-in-law, and I desire to present a case.

Beadle.—( In excitement. ) Alas ! The king's brother-in-law is the first to present a case ! Good ! Sir, please wait a while, while I shall inform the judges of this. ( He approaches the Judges. ) Gentlemen, here is the king's brother-in-law who has come to court, desirous to present a case.

Judge.—What ! the king's brother-in-law is the first who desires to present a case ? Like an eclipse at sunrise, this evidently bespeaks the ruin of some great man. Beadle, the suits of to-day must be very perplexing and complicate. My good man, go forth, and say to him " Please go to-day, your suit cannot be considered. "

Beadle.—Yes, your Honor, ( He goes out and approaches Samsthanaka. ) Sir the judges send word that you are to go to-day and that your suit cannot be considered.

Sak.—( With great indignation. ) What ! Why shall not my suit be considered ? If it isn't considered, then I will tell my brother-in-law, king Palaka, my sister's husband and I will tell my mother and my sister, too, and I will have this judge removed, and another judge appointed. ( He starts to go away. )

Beadle.—Oh, sir ! Brother-in-law of the king ! Wait a moment. I will inform the judges of this. ( Approaching the Judge. ) The brother-in-law of the king is angry, and says—( He repeats Samsthanaka's words. )

Judge.—This fool might do anything. My good man, tell him. " Come in ; your suit will be considered. "

Beadle.—( Approaching Samsthanaka ) Sir, the judges send word that you are to come in, and that your suit will be considered. Pray enter, sir.

Sak.—First they say it won't be considered, then now they say it will be considered. Evidently, the judges are very timid. Whatever I say, I will make them believe it. Good ! I will go in. ( He enters and approaches the judges. ) We are doing very well. Your happiness, I may or may not grant (wish).

Judge.—( To himself. ) The firm determination of one who seeks the aid of law is, indeed, highly wonderful. ( Aloud ) Pray be seated.

Sak.—Well this floor is mine, and I will sit down wherever I like. ( To the gild-president. ) I shall sit here, ( To the beadle. )

Why shouldn't I sit here? (He lays his hand on the judge's head)
I will sit here (He sits on the floor.)

Judge.—You desire to lodge a complaint?

Sak.—Of course.

Judge.—Then state the case.

Sak.—I will whisper it near your ears; I was born in a great family glorious as a wine-glass

My father is the father-in-law of the king, my father's son-in-law is this king, I am the king's brother-in-law, and the king is my sister's husband. (6)

Judge.—Everything is well-known.

What is the use of proclaiming a noble birth? Character alone is the best criterion herein. Thorns and weeds grow abundantly on a fertile soil. (7)

So narrate your case.

Sak.—I will say thus. And even if I was guilty, he wouldn't do anything to me. Well, my brother-in-law the king, being pleased with me, gave me the best of all gardens the old garden Pushpakaranda, to play in and look after it. And there I go every day to look at it, to keep it dry, to keep it clean, to keep it luxuriant, and to keep it trimmed. By the destiny of fate, I see,—rather I don't see,—the dead body of a woman.

Judge.—Do you know who the dead lady was?

Sak.—Hallo, magistrate! How could I not know her—a woman like that, who is the ornament of the city, and who is herself decked with hundreds of ornaments. By some wicked and mean fellow, Vasantasena, for the sake of a mere trifling thing, was enticed into the old garden Pushpakaranda, when it was lonely, and she was forcibly strangled and murdered there. But not by me—(Thus half-saying, he covers his face.)

Judge.—The carelessness of the watchmen of the city is highly deplorable! Gild-president and clerk, first note down "Not by me" as a subject of the legal proceeding.

Clerk.—Yes, your honor. (He does so.) Sir, it is written.

Sak.—(To himself.) Alas! Now I have ruined myself like the mendicant who feasted in a hurry on (hot) Payasa (a preparation of milk). Well, I will get out of it in this way (Aloud.) Well, well, magistrates! I say that not by me was it seen. What are you making this hubbub for? (He wipes it out with his foot what was written.)

Judge.—How do you know that she was strangled, and that for the sake of wealth?

Sak.—Hallo! Really I infer so much because her neck was swollen and bare, and the place where ornaments are worn were without any.

Guild-president and clerk.—That seems plausible.

Sak.—(To himself) Fortunately, life has been infused into me, again, Hurrah!

Guild-president and clerk.—Sir, upon whom does the conduct of the suit depend? (Whom else do we require in this case?)

Judge.—Every suit, in this respect, has a two-fold aspect.

Guild-president and clerk.—How so?

Judge.—One in the light of the allegations, the other in the light of actual facts. Now the investigation of the allegations is left between the plaintiff and the defendant, while the investigation of the facts must be carried out by the wisdom of the judge.

Guild-president and clerk.—Then the conduct of the case depends on Vasantasena's mother?

Judge.—Exactly so. My good beadle, summon Vasantasena's mother, without giving her cause for anxiety.

Beadle.—Yes, your Honour. (He goes out, and returns with the mother of the courtesan.) Come along, madam, come along.

Old woman.—My daughter went to the house of a friend to enjoy her youth. But now comes this long-lived gentleman, and says "Come. The judge summons you." I find myself quite bewildered. My heart is palpitating. Sir, please direct me the way to the court of justice.

Beadle.—Follow me, madam, (Both walk about.) Here is the court room, pray, enter, madam. (They both go in.)

Old woman.—(Approaching.) May happiness attend you, most honoured and reverend gentlemen!

Judge.—Madam, you are very welcome. Pray be seated.

Old woman.—Yes, your Honour. (She seats herself.)

Sak.—(With distraction.) You are here, are you, you old bawd?

Judge.—Are you Vasantasena's mother?

Old woman.—Of course.

Judge.—Whither has Vasantasena gone now?

Old woman.—(To the house of a friend.)

Judge.—What is the name of the friend?

Old woman.—(To herself.) Alas! Alas! This is highly shameful. (Aloud.) This can be asked by ordinary men, but not by a judge.

Judge.—Pray, do not be ashamed to speak out. The conduct of the case puts the question to you,

Gild-president and clerk.—The law puts the question. There is not fault. Speak out.

Old woman.—What! Legal procedure? If that is so, then listen, worthy gentlemen. There lives in the merchants' quarter the grandson of the merchant Vinayadatta, the son of Sagaradatta, and his name, so auspicious to invoke in itself is Charudatta. In his house, my daughter enjoys the pleasures of youth.

Sak.—Did you hear it, gentlemen? Let these words be written down. My complaint is against Charudatta.

Gild-president and clerk.—It is no sin for Charudatta to be her friend.

Judge.—The burden of proof is now shifted on Charudatta.

Gild-president and clerk.—Exactly.

Judge.—Dhanadatta, note down as the first head of this litigation that Vasantasena went to the house of the worthy Charudatta. It cannot be helped, the worthy Charudatta also is to be summoned. At any rate the course of the litigation demands his presence. Go, my good beadle, and summon worthy Charudatta, gently and calmly, without excitement, without giving cause for anxiety, and with due respect. Tell him "Incidentally, the judge desires to see you."

Beadle.—Yes, your Honour. (He goes out, then returns with Charudatta.) Come, sir, come.

Cha.—(Reflecting.) The king is well aware of my character and noble birth, and his summons really, therefore, indicates his suspicious attitude towards my wretched condition in life. (8)

(Reflectively. To himself.) Has the king, perhaps, observed that the person who escaped from the dungeon, and who met me on the road, was carried off by me in my chariot, or has the king, seeing through detectives, been informed of it? Why should I else be forced to walk thus, like a person accused of an offence? (9)

Rather why should there be any deliberation about it? I shall go direct to the court of justice. My good beadle, direct me the way to the court room.

Beadle.—Come along, sir, come along. (They walk about,)

Cha.—(With great apprehension.) And what means this?

This crow shrieks very harshly, the ministerial servants call on me repeatedly, and my left eye throbs violently. Ah! These evil omens torment me very much. (10)

Beadle.—Follow me, sir, freely and without any excitement.

Cha.—(He walks about and looks before him.)

On yonder withered tree, a crow remains perched, facing the sun, and it throws directly its frightful glances against me. (11)

( He looks in another direction. ) What ! a serpent here !

This lord of serpents, who is resplendent like a piece of black antimony suddenly broken to pieces, whose tongue is long and quivering, and who has four white fangs, slumbered here till I crossed his path and now, with its coiled and inflated belly and with its eyes fixed full at me, it hastens towards me in anger. (12)

And more than this.

I stumble on the ground, though the earth is not very wet. My left eye throbs and my left arm trembles repeatedly. And this, another bird, screams terribly so often. All these portend a cruel and disastrous death, and there needn't be any doubt about it. (13)

Surely, the gods will see that all may be yet well.

Beadle.—Come along, sir, come along. This is the courtroom. Pray enter, sir.

Cha.—( He enters and looks about. ) How wonderful and splendid is the court !

[It resembles with its cruel agencies, an ocean in itself with all its murderous and cruel elements. The councillors deep in thought are its waters, the envoys constitute its billows and conches, and the spies that stand out are its sharks and crocodiles. It is the abode of elephants, horses and other murderous animals. It is crowded with storks of litigating parties, that make noise in different ways. It is the resort of serpents in the guise of scribes, and its banks are trodden smooth by science of politics. (14) ]

Well, ( As he enters, his head dashes against the door. Reflecting ) Alas ! This is another evil omen !

My left eye throbs, the crow shrieks very loudly, and my path is obstructed by the serpent. My safety now lies with gods alone. (15)

I shall, however, enter just now. ( He does so ).

Judge.—Really, this is Charudatta.

His face is marked by a prominent nose, and his eyes are large at the outer corners. Surely, this cannot be the abode of wantonly perpetrated crimes. With elephants, cows, and horses, and much more with men, it is the case that good appearance is never without a similar excellent and noble con-

Cha.—O ! honorary officials of justice, my greetings to you ! O ! Officers of justice, how do you do ?

Judge.—( With some agitation. ) Welcome to you, sir, my good beadle, bring a seat for this gentleman.

Beadle.—( Brings a seat. ) Here is a seat. Pray be seated sir

( Charudatta seats himself. )

Sak.—( Angrily to the Judge. ) You are here, are you, you woman murderer ? Is this a fair legal procedure, a just one, where seat is given to a woman-murderer ? ( Haughtily. ) Well, let it be given now.

Judge.—Worthy Charudatta have you any connection, or friendship, or at least attachment, with this lady's daughter ?

Cha.—What lady ?

Judge.—This lady. ( He points to Vasantasena's mother. )

Cha.—( Rising. ) Madam, I salute you.

Old woman.—Long life to you, son ! ( Aside. ) So this is the famous Charudatta. My daughter has pledged her youth in good hands.

Judge.—Sir, is the courtesan your friend ? ( Charudatta betrays his bashfulness. )

Sak.—He tries to hide the wicked deed he committed, and he utters a lie from shame or fear ; he himself murdered her for the sake of wealth, and he now hides it. (17)

Gild-president and clerk.—Speak out, worthy Charudatta. Do not be ashamed. Indeed, this is a legal proceeding.

Cha.—( with feelings of shame. )—Honorary judges, how can I testify to a statement of the kind that a courtesan is my friend ? Rather, youth is herein to blame, and not character.

Judge.—This trial is full of troubles ; banish all reserve from your heart. Speak the truth ; enough of gravity of deportment and quibbling won't be accepted here. Enough of your bashfulness. The legal proceeding puts the question to you. (18).

Cha.—Judges, with whom have I a law-suit ?

Sak.—( Arrogantly ) A law-suit with me.

Cha.—I to have a law-suit with you ? Really, it is hard to endure.

Sak.—You woman murderer ! Having murdered a woman like Vasantasena, adorned with hundreds of gems and ornaments, you now have become a cunning and tricky man and hide your crime.

Cha.—You are really an absurd fellow !

Judge.—Worthy Charudatta, enough of him. Speak the truth. Is the courtesan your friend ?

Cha.—She is.

Judge.—Sir, where is Vasantasena now ?

Cha.—She has gone home.

Gild-president and Clerk.—Speak out, sir !

Cha.—She went home. What more shall I say ?

Sak.—She was enticed into my old garden Pushpakaranda, and for the sake of gold, she was forcibly strangled and murdered there. But now you say that she has gone home.

Cha.—Man, you are crazy and you are talking nonsense.

You have not been sprinkled over with the waters of the clouds, and yet your face, in the middle of the forehead and in the space between the eye-brows, resembles very much the forewings of the blue-jay in the sky. This complaint of yours is evidently false, and so it is that your face has become destitute of its lustre like a lotus in winter. (19)

Judge.—( Aside. ) To stigmatise Charudatta is, as it were, to lift the lord of mountains, or to ~~cross~~ the ocean, or it is, as it were to hold the ( fleeting ) wind with our grasp. (20)

( Aloud ), This is the noble Charudatta. How could he commit this crime ? ( He repeats the verse. "His face is marked etc. etc. etc." )

Sak.—Why this partiality in a legal proceeding ?

Judge.—Begone, you fool ?

Lowborn and illiterate as you are, you expound the meaning of the Vedas, and yet your tongue does not drop down lifeless. You gaze at the mid-day sun, but yet your eyes are not blinded at once. You thrust your hand into the blazing fire, and yet it is not burnt down. You deprive Charudatta of his reputable character, and yet the earth hasn't gulped up your frame. How could the noble Charudatta commit a crime ? (21)

By him the mighty sea has been rendered bereft of everything ( all the riches ) except only the swelling waters ; and he distributed all his riches without the expectation of any return whatever. He is the sole receptacle of all virtuous and magnanimous deeds, and how could such a high-souled personage as he commit, for the sake of wealth a sinful deed, which even an enemy will not think of doing ? (22)

Old woman.—You scoundrel ! When the golden casket which was deposited with him was stolen by thieves at night, he gave in place of it a pearl necklace that was the pride of the four seas : and how could such a person now perpetrate this sinful deed for the mere trifle of gold ? Oh, my child, come back to me, my daughter ? ( She weeps. )

Judge.—Worthy Charudatta, did she go on foot or in a chariot ?

Cha.—She did not go in my presence. Therefore I do not know whether she went on foot, or in a chariot.

(Enter Viraka, in anger.)

Viraka.—That dishonouring and insulting kick has roused in me a dire and deadly animosity, and so I brooded, till at last the night yielded to the dawning light. (23)

So now I will approach the court of justice. (He enters.) May happiness attend you, worthy sirs!

Judge.—Ah, it is Viraka, the captain of the city guard. Viraka, what brings you here?

Viraka.—I was looking for Aryaka, when it was all excitement that he had broken loose from the chains. I suspected a covered chariot that was coming, and was about to inspect it while I said "You have inspected it and now I shall also inspect it." Just then I was kicked with feet by the highly respectable Chandanaka. Having heard this, you, honoured gentlemen, will decide what to do.

Judge.—My good man, do you know whose chariot it was?

Viraka.—It was the chariot of Charudatta, this gentleman here. It was told by the driver of the chariot that Vasantasena was mounted on it, and was being taken to the old garden Pushpakaranda to sport therein.

Sak.—Sirs, listen to that, too?

Judge.—Alas! This moon, though spotless-bright, is now eclipsed by Rahu. The banks have fallen down, and the waters are soiled that once were bright and clear. (24).

Viraka, we will investigate your case here, later. Mount the horse that remains at the entrance of this court, go to the garden Pushpakaranda, and see if there is a dead woman there, or not.

Viraka.—Yes, your honour (He goes out and then enters again.) I have been there, and I saw the body of a woman there that is being eaten up by jackals.

Gild-president and clerk.—How did you know that it was the body of a woman?

Viraka.—I perceived that from the tresses of hair and arms, and hands and feet.

Judge.—Alas! The ways of the world are, indeed very mysterious, and hard to learn.

The more skilfully we investigate it, the harder and more complicated does it become. Ah! The points of law are very clear, but the mind labours like a cow in a quagmire. (25).

Cha.—(To himself) Just in the same way as bees, when first flowers begin to bloom, crowd to sip the honey, so too, in a man's times of calamity, his misfortunes multiply with the opening of every weak point. (26)

Judge.—Worthy Charudatta, speak out the truth.

Cha.—He is a person of wicked disposition and he is envious of others' excellences. He is blinded by passions, and he is desirous of murdering another. Is that which a ( base ) man like him lies, out of a general evil nature, to be accepted ( as evidence ) in this court of justices ? it is not worth considering at all. (27).

And more than this.

I never drag rudely a blossomed creeper for the sake of flowers and thereby gather its flowers. How could then such a person as I seize a damsel by her long and lovely tresses that are as bright as the wings of bees, and kill her while she is screaming ( for life ) ? (28)

Sak.—Hallo, judges ! How can you investigate the case with such partiality ? Why, even now you let this accursed Charudatta remain in his seat.

Judge.—My good beadle, let it be done accordingly. ( The beadle does so. )

Cha.—Consider, judges, consider what you are doing. ( He leaves his seat and sits on the floor ).

Sak.—( Dancing about in joy. ( To himself. ) Glad ! The sinful deed that was committed by me is thrown on another man's head. So I will sit where Charudatta was seated. ( He does so. ). Look at me, Charudatta, and confess that you murdered her.

Cha.—Judges ! ( He repeats "He is a person etc, etc." sloka. (27)
( Sighing deeply. To himself. )

O ! Maitreya ! Why now this ruin of mine ? Ah, my dear wife ! You are born of a stainless Brahman family ! Ha ! Rohasena ! You don't understand my misfortune and you delight wrongly and in vain, when others are plunged in miseries. (29)

Maitreya was sent by me to Vasantasena in order that he might get tidings of her, and might restore the jewels which were given by her on account of the toy-cart. Why then does he linger ?

( Enter Maitreya with the jewels. )

Maitreya—I have been sent by worthy Charudatta to Vasantasena, to return her ornaments, and he said to me ; " Maitreya, Vasantasena adorned my dear Rohasena with her own ornaments, and sent him to his mother. She deserves to be given ornaments, but not we to receive them. Therefore restore them to her." So now I will go to Vasantasena directly. ( He walks about and looks around. ) ( In the air. ) What ! Master Rebhila ! Master Rebhila, why do you look so confused and agitated ? ( Listening )

What ! Do you mean to say that my dear friend Charudatta has been summoned to court ? Then it can hardly be for an insignificant matter. (Reflecting.) So I will go to Vasantasena's house later, but in the meanwhile I shall go to the court of justice. (He walks about and looks around.) Here is the court-room. I will go in immediately. (Entering.) May happiness attend you, officers of justice ! Where is my dear friend ?

Judge.—Here he is.

Mait.—Friend, I wish you happiness.

Cha.—It shall be mine.

Mait.—Are you doing well ?

Cha.—That, too, will come to be.

Mait.—Dear friend, why do you look agitated and troubled ? And why were you summoned ?

Cha.—Friend.

By me, a cruel sinner, who is ignorant of another world, a damsel, or better Rati herself. ————— he will tell you the rest.

Mait.—What ? What ?

Cha.—(Whispers.) That is it.

Mait.—Who tells that ?

Cha.—(Pointing to Sakara.) Fate directs this pitiable fellow to be the instrument of my end.

Mait.—(Aside to Charudatta.) Why don't you simply say that she went home ?

Cha.—Even though I say it, it isn't accepted as true, owing to the unfortunate plight in which I am.

Mait.—Oh ! Gentlemen ? He adorned the city of Ujjaini with mansions, monasteries, parks, temples, tanks, wells, and sacrificial posts, and could such a person as he commit, because he is poor, a sinful deed of the kind, for the mere trifling thing of gold ? (In great anger.) You son of a slave-wench, you brother-in-law of the king, Samsthanaka, you libertine, you slanderer, you buffoon, you gilded monkey, say it before me, how my dear friend who does not gather flowers by dragging the blossomed jasmine creeper, for fear that a twig, by being so drawn, would be broken asunder, how such a person could commit a sinful deed of this kind that is censurable in the eyes of both the worlds. Stay for a time you son of a bawd, stay a while ! I will split your head into a hundred pieces with this staff of mine which is as crooked as your heart.

Sak.—( Angrily. ) Listen to that, gentleman, listen to that ! My contention, rather my law suit, is against Charudatta. What right has this man who has a head that looks a caret, to split my head into a hundred pieces ? Not so much. You son of a slave-wench ! You wicked fellow ! ( Maitreya raises his staff, and repeats the above said words. Sakara rises angrily and strikes him. Maitreya strikes doubly in return. They beat each other. During the scuffle the ornaments fall from Maitreya's girdle. )

Sak.—( Picks up the jewels and examines them. With great fear and excitement. ) Look, gentlemen, look ! Really, these are the ornaments of that pitiable damsel ( Pointing to Charudatta. ) For a trifling thing of this, she was murdered, and killed, too.

( The judges all of them remain with their heads bent down. )

Cha.—( Aside to Maitreya. )

These ornaments which fell down because of the adverseness of my fate, and which thus became open to view at such an ill hour as this, will certainly cause my ruin. (31).

Mait.—Sir, why don't you simply tell the truth ?

Cha.—My friend.

The royal eye is short-sighted, and so does not perceive the realities. Speaking truth results in mere misery, and in glorious death is its end. (32).

Judge.—Alas ! Alas !

Another planet has risen like a comet by the side of Jupiter who is himself powerless and who has the planet Mārs opposed to him. (33).

Gild-president and clerk.—( Beholding the ornaments. To Vasantasena's mother ) Madam, look at these ornaments attentively and see if they are the same or not.

Old woman.—( Looking at them. ) They are similar, but not the same.

Sak.—Oh, you old bawd ? You confess it with your eyes, but hide it with your lips.

Old woman.—Away, you scoundrel !

Gild-president and clerk.—Speak carefully. Are these ornaments the same, or not !

Old woman.—Sir, the workman's skill captivates the eye. But really they are not the same.

Judge.—My good woman, do you recognize these jewels ?

Old woman.—I say they are not the same and I don't recognize them. Rather it may be that they were perhaps made by the same workman.

Judge.—Gild-president, see !

Of course, ornaments prepared by human agency can well resemble one another. Workmen, after the analogy of one can, by the dexterity of their hand, fashion another which will be exactly identical with the prototype. (34)

Gild-president and clerk.—Do these ornaments belong to Charudatta ?

Cha.—No ! No !

Gild-president and clerk.—Then, whose are these ?

Cha.—They belong to the daughter of this worthy lady.

Gild-president and clerk.—How are these removed from her ?

Cha.—Thus they were separated. Yes, in this way.

Gild-president and clerk.—Worthy Charudatta, truth must be spoken here. See ! See !

By speaking truth, happiness is obtained in this world, and no sin is committed when truth is spoken. Truth is a word of two sacred syllables, and so don't hide truth by uttering a lie. (35)

Cha.—I don't recognize the ornaments as ornaments, but I understand they were taken from my house.

Sak.—You have enticed her into the garden, and murdered. And now you hide it by deceitful and cunning tricks.

Judge.—Worthy Charudatta, let truth be narrated.

Undoubtedly, the heavy lashes shall fall relentlessly on your tender body, and along with them our desires also shall fall. (36)

Cha.—I was born, of a family of sinless persons and also I commit no sin. If I am deemed by you to be a sinner, then what avails my being sinless ? (37)

(Aside)—~~There is no use of my life at all, when I am deprived of Vasantasena.~~

(Aloud)—~~Sir, why waste words ? By me, a cruel sinner who has not known the two worlds, a damsel, or better a gem—he will say the rest.~~ (38)

Sak.—Was ! Aye, you yourself say " I killed her. "

Cha.—You have said it.

Sak.—Listen, my masters, listen ! He murdered her ! He alone ! All doubts are gone. Let capital punishment be inflicted on this poor Charudatta.

Judge.—Beadle, we must do as the king's brother-in-law says. Guardsmen, let this Charudatta be taken prisoner. (The guardsmen do so.)

Old woman—Be pacified, good gentlemen, be merciful.

(She repeats what she had said before, beginning "When the golden casket etc. etc.") If my daughter is killed, she is killed. Let him live a long life for my sake. Besides, the legal proceeding is between the complainant and the accused. I am the real complainant. So let him go free!

Sak.—Begone, you born slave? Go away. What have you to do with this?

Judge.—Go, madam. Guardsman, conduct her forth.

Old woman.—Oh, my child, my son? (Exit, weeping.)

Sak.—(To himself.) I have done in respect of this individual something worthy of myself. Now I will go. (Exit.)

Judge.—Worthy Charudatta, the decision lies with us, but the rest depends on the king. And yet, beadle let this be submitted to the notice of the king Palaka.

This convicted culprit is a Brahman, and Manu says that capital punishment cannot be inflicted on such a one. He may be banished from our realm, with all his wealth uninjured. (39)

Beadle.—Yes, your honour. (He goes out, then re-enters in tears.) Oh, sirs, I had been there, and king Palaka says: "In as much as he killed Vasantasena for the trifle of wealth, these same jewels shall be hung about his neck, the drum shall be beaten, he shall be conducted to the southern burial-ground, and there impaled." And whoever else shall commit such a crime, shall be punished with like dreadful doom.

Cha.—Oh, how wanton and inconsiderate is this act of King Palaka! Rather.

It is in this way that rulers of the earth thrown by their ministers into the fire of such sort of equity, most rightly attain a miserable plight (i. e. become foul sinners). (40).

And again:—

It is through men of this type, that are servile, timid and cunning and that pervert the king's true sense of justice that thousands of innocent people were killed and are continued to be killed even now. (41)

My friend Maitreya, go, and salute the divine mother in my name. Look after my son Rohasena.

Mait.—When the root is cut away, how can the tree be saved?

Cha.—No, not so.

When man departs to worlds above, the reflection of him yet remains in his son. So whatever love you have for me, let it be bestowed, for me, on my son Rohasena. (42)

Mait.—O! dear friend, being your dear friend, how can I preserve my life, when I am deprived of you?

Cha.—You look after Rohasena too, so well.

Mait.—I will. It is quite proper.

Judge.—My good beadle, take away this fellow.

( The beadle does so. )

Judge.—Who is there? Let orders be given to Chandalas.

( The guardsmen loose their hold on Charudatta, and all of them go out. )

Beadle.—Come here, sir.

Cha.—( Mournfully repeats the verse already said, beginning with "My friend Maitreya etc. etc." In the air ) If in my trial I was put to the test of poison, water, scale, or fire, and had I fallen therein, then it should have been decided that the sword might be applied to this body. But as you slay me, an innocent Brahman, on the mere malicious charge of an enemy, you shall be hurled into the very interior regions of the hell, together with your sons, grandsons, and all others of your progeny. (43)

I am coming just now.

[ Exeunt Omnes. ]

ACT X.

—:O:—

( Then enter Charudatta, accompanied by two Chandalas. )

Chandalas—what is there to consider ( to be afraid of ) ? Inquire not the reason. We are clever in new modes of killing and fettering. We are expert in chopping off the heads, and in impaling in a short time. (1)

Make way, gentlemen, make way ? This is the worthy Charudatta.

He is garlanded with flowers of fragrant oleander, and he is in the custody of us, who are his executioners. His lustre fades gently little by little, like a lamp the oil of which is exhausted. (2)

Cha.—( Mournfully. )

My body is drenched with drops of tears, it is covered with flowers of the graveyard, and coated with red sandal, and my limbs are soiled with dust. These crows, cawing harshly and discordantly are anxious to eat up this body of mine, as if it were an oblated offering left unto them. (3)

Chan.—Go out of the way, gentlemen, go out of the way.

Why do you gaze on this goodly tree, to be cut asunder by the fall of the cruel axe——this goodly tree in the form of the noble and virtuous Charudatta, the peaceful resort for birds in the form of good persons. (4) Come, Charudatta, come !

Cha.—Inscrutable are the ways (vicissitudes) of human destiny, in as much as I am converted into a beast of offering. (5)

( Observing in front of him. ) Alas for the judgment of men ! ( Mournfully. )

Seeing what has befallen me, these citizens shed tears profusely and curse being born a man ; and being unable to save me, they bless me with the words “ May you attain Swarga ? ” (6)

Chan.—Get away, gentleman, get away ! Why do you see this !

Indra-pole's being carried off, the delivery of a ( pregnant ) cow, the falling down of the stars, the slaying of a good man—all these four things are never to be observed by people. (7)

Chan. I—Look. Ahinta ! Look, man !

If the best of the citizens is to be put to death at the behest of Fate, do the heavens weep, or does the thunderbolt fall when there is no cloud ? (8)

Chan. II—Aye, Goha ;

The heavens do not weep, nor does the thunderbolt fall when there is no cloud. But torrents of water fall from clouds of crowded women, in the form of gushing tears. (9)

And again ;

While the poor victim is being led to the execution ground, each and every one weeps so much that the dust in the streets being wet with tears does not rise at all. (10)

Cha.—(Observing with dejection.)

These women who stay in their mansions, with their faces emerging through half shut windows, lament for me "Alas for Charudatta ?" and they shed profusely floods of tears, as if through a conduit. (11)

Chan.—Come, Charudatta come ! Here is the place of proclamation. Beat the drum, and proclaim the sentence.

Listen, gentlemen, listen ! This person is the grandson of the merchant Vinayadatta, and the son of Sagardatta, and he goes by the name of worthy Charudatta. This culprit for the sake of a mere trifling thing as gold enticed the courtesan Vasantasena into the lonely garden Pushpakaranda and had her murdered there by forcibly strangling her. He was caught with the stolen property and he himself confessed his guilt. We have been therefore ordered by King Palaka to execute him. And if any other commit such a crime objectionable in this world and in the next, then he will be condemned by King Palaka with a like punishment.

Cha.—(Despondently. To himself.)

My lineage, sanctified by the performance of hundreds of sacrifices, was in my former days highly glorified in sacrificial assemblies by the chantings of Brahamans at the sacred altar ; but now when I am about to be put to death, such a lineage is publicly announced by sinful men of completely different type at the place where the penal sentence is proclaimed.

(He trembles and stops his ears.) Vasantasena, Oh, my beloved ?

Your teeth were radiant like the white and resplendent rays of the moon, and your lower lips resembled the red and beautiful coral. How shall I, helpless as I am, drink the venom of illfame, after having quaffed the ambrosia from thy mouth ? (13)

Chan.—Make way, gentlemen, make way !

This treasure of gems consituted by virtues, this bridge whereby the good men cross their miseries, this ornament not of gold of the city, is being removed to-day out of it. (14)

And again :

In this world, each and every one feels, for only those who are already happily situated in life ; but it is hard to get a single individual who will do good to the distressed and the miserable. (15)

Chan.—(Looking about in all directions.)

These friends of mine move at a great distance from me with their faces covered with the hem of their garments ; even a stranger becomes a friend of the well-to do while none is a friend of him who finds himself in adverse circumstances. (16)

Cha.—The way is made, and the high road is cleared. Lead on the condemned criminal.

(Charudatta deeply sighs, and repeats as said above "O Maitreya etc. etc.")

(Voices behind the scenes.)

Ah ! My papa ! Ah, my friend !

Cha.—(Listening, mournfully.) Oh, you are the best of your own caste, and I desire to beg a favour at your hands ?

Headsman.—Why do you beg a favour at our hands ?

Cha.—Heaven forbid ! A Chandala is not so wanton and careless as Palaka, nor is he a man of bad conduct like Palaka. I beg to see the face of my son in order that I may be happy in the other world.

Chan.—Let it be done so.

(A voice behind the scenes.) Ah, papa ! Ah, father !

(Charudatta hears the words and mournfully repeats his request.)

Headsmen.—Citizens, make way for a moment. Let this noble Charudatta have a look at his son's face, (Turning to the back of the stage.) Sir, come this way, come this way. Come boy, come.

(Then enter Maitreya with the little boy.)

Mail.—Make haste, my dear boy, make haste ! Your father is being led to be put to death.

Boy.—My papa ! Oh ! My papa !

Mail.—Ah, my dear friend ! Where must I behold you ?

Cha.—(Seeing his son and his friend.) Ah, my son. Ah Maitreya ! (Mournfully.) Alas !

I shall, in the other world suffer long from thirst, for his libation of water at my funeral rites is too insufficient for me. (17)

What shall I give my son ? (He looks at himself, and looks at the sacred thread also.) Yes, this at least is mine.

Though unadorned with pearls or with gold, it is, nevertheless the ornament of the Brahmans, and it is through this that oblations or libations are offered to the gods or to the manes. (18)

(He gives the sacred thread.)

Chan. I—Come, Charudatta, come !

Chan. II—Why do you call the noble Charudatta without some word of respect attached to his name ? For see,

In prosperity or in adversity, by the night or the day, the invulnerable Fate holds its own course like an unrestrained young mare. (19)

And again :

Titles are empty things ; what has he done that we should not bow our heads before him ? Although Rahu may seize the moon, is she not adored by men ? (20)

Boy.—You, Chandalas, where do you lead my father ?

Cha.—Wearing a garland of oleander round my neck, carrying gibbet on the shoulder, and grief in the heart, I follow these now to the place of execution, like a he-goat that is led to the place of immolation to be slaughtered in the sacrifice. (21)

Chan. I—My boy,

We are not really Chandalas, even though born of the Chandala race. Those sinful men who dishonour and disgrace the virtuous, they alone are Chandalas. (22)

Boy.—Then why do you kill my father ?

Chan. I—O ! Long-lived one, it is the order of the king that is to blame, and not we.

Boy.—Slay me but let go my father.

Chan. I—O ! Long-lived one, may you who speak thus live long !

Cha.—(Embracing his son, with tears in his eyes.)

Alike to the rich and the poor, this ( act of embrace ) is the all-in all of affection, and it soothes and calms the heart though consisting neither of sandal nor of Usira. (23)

( He repeats again. " Wearing around the neck etc. " )

( He looks about. To himself. ) ( He repeats again. " These friends of mine etc. etc. " )

Mait.—My good men, let my dear friend Charudatta go free but slay me instead.

Cha.—Heaven forbid ! ( Looking about. To himself. ) Now I understand. ( Repeats verse 16; Aloud—repeats verse 11. )

Headsman. I—Go away, gentleman, go away !

Why do you gaze on this good person, in whom all hopes of life are lost through a mere dirty scandal, and who resembles a golden pitcher sinking into a well, the rope being snapped. (14)

Cha.—( Mournfully.—Repeats verse 13. )

Headsmen II,—Aye, proclaim the sentence again.

( The headsmen does so. )

Cha.—Because of adversity I have already become reduced to this wretched and despicable condition the fruit whereof is the end of my life. This proclamation gives my mind intense pain, that I have to hear it proclaimed that such a one as she has been murdered by me. (25)

( Then enter Sthavaraka, fettered in the palace tower. )

Sthavaraka.—( Listening to the proclamation, with sorrow. )

What ! The innocent Charudatta being put to death ! I have been chained by my master. Hell, I shall cry aloud listen gentlemen, listen ! It was I, sinner that I am, that led, Vasantasena to the old garden Pushpakaranda, because she mistook my chariot for another. And then my master, seeing that she would not love him strangled forcibly this woman, and murdered her, and it is not the worthy gentlemen that did it. What ! They are so far away that no one hears me. What shall I do then ! Shall I cast myself down ? ( Reflecting. ) If I do so, then the noble Charudatta will not be put to death. Well, I shall throw myself down from the palace tower through this dilapidated window. Better that I should die but not the noble Charudatta, the tree wherein noble born youth dwels. If I die thus, I have attained heavens. ( Throwing himself down. ) Wonderful ! I am not dead, and my fetters too, are broken. I shall now follow the noise of proclamation by Chandalas. ( He discovers the Chandalas and hastens forward. ), Ho, Chandlas, make way, make way !

Headsmen.—Man, who seeks way ?

( Sthavaraka repeats as above-said “ Listen, gentlemen, listen etc. etc. etc.” )

Cha.—Who is it that comes at this hour, while I am caught amidst the snare of Yama, like the Drona-clouds, when the crops ( i. e. to renovates them ) are parched by drought ? (23)

Listen ! do you hear what I say ?

I am not afraid of death but my soiled name affects me very much. My death, without my good name being affected, would be equal in my eyes to the birth of a son.

And again.

By that mean blockhead, whom I never hated, and who is base and corrupted, I have been ruined as if by an envenomed arrow. (28)

Headsmen.—Sthavaraka, are you telling the truth ?

Serv.—Quite true. In order to keep me from telling any body, I was thrown into chains, and imprisoned in the tower of his palace.

Sak.—( Entering. In great joy. )

I had my dinner in my own palace, and I ate rice with meat, acid sauce, vegetables soup and fish, boiled rice and rice boiled with coarse sugar. (29)

( He listens. ) The headsman's voice ! They sound like a broken brass cymble. I hear the music of the fatal drum and the kettle-drums, and so I infer that the pitiable poor Charudatta is led to the place of execution, I shall behold it. Really, the destruction of a foe is the greatest delight to my heart. Besides I have heard that a man who sees his enemy being killed, will not have sore eyes in his next birth. Like a worm that had crept into the bulb of a lotus-stalk, I looked for a hole to get out, and brought about the ruin of poor Charudatta. Now I will get up to the tower of my own palace and witness my heroic deed. ( He does so and looks about. ) Wonderful ! What a crowd of people there is, when this poor Charudatta is led to the place of execution ! What would it be when a great and grand personage like me is led to his death ? ( Beholding ) Look ! He is led to the south, adorned like a young bull. But why was the proclamation made near my palace tower, and why was it stopped ? ( He looks about. ) What ! My servant Sthavaraka too, is not here. May it be that he has run away and betrayed the secret I shall now look for him. ( He gets down and approaches the crowd. )

Serv.—( Beholding him. ) There he comes, good gentlemen.

Headsman.—Make way ! Make room ! Fasten the door and remain silent. Here comes a mad bull whose horns are sharp with wickedness, (30)

Sak.—Aye ! Make way ! Make way ! ( He approaches. ) Sthavaraka, my little son, my servant, come, let us go home.

Serv.—You scoundrel ! Are you not content with having murdered Vasantasena ? And you now make an attempt to murder the noble Charudatta who is the wish-yielding tree to the needy ?

Sak.—I resemble a gemmed pot and I kill no woman.

Crowd.—Ho ! You alone murdered her, and not the noble Charudatta.

Sak.—Who says that ?

Crowd.—( Pointing to Sthavaraka, ) This good gentleman.

Sams.—( In great fear. To himself. ) Merciful heavens ! Why was not the slave, Sthavaraka, chained by me very well ?

Indeed, he was the witness of my crime. (Reflecting) I will do it this way. (aloud.) He utters a lie, masters. This servant of mine was caught by me while stealing gold, and he was beaten, murdered, and imprisoned by me. ~~He~~ bears therefore an enmity for me, and what he says isn't true.

(He secretly hands Sthavaraka a bracelet and whispers) Sthavaraka. my little son, servant, take this and say something different.

Sarv.—(Takes it) Look, gentleman, look! He is trying to allure me through gold.

Sak.—(Snatching the bracelet from him.) This is the golden ornament on account of which he was enchained by me. (In great wrath.) Look here, headsmen! I put him in charge of the gold-chest, and when he stole the golden ornament, I murdered him and beat him. If you don't believe it, just look at his back.

Headsmen—(Beholding.) He speaks right. A branded servant is really a prattler.

Serv.—Alas! This is the fault of being a servant that nobody believes him even though he speaks truth. (Mournfully.) Noble Charudatta, I have no further power. (He falls at Charudatta's feet.)

Cha.—(Mournfully.) Rise up, you, my good man, who take compassion on innocent men in adversity, who are come to befriend me without the expectation of any return, and who are of a virtuous disposition. You have made great efforts to liberate me, but Fate alone does not co-operate with you. What can you do more? (31)

Headsmen—Master, beat your servant and banish him away.

Sak.—Get away, you fellow! (He drives him away.) Headsmen, why do you linger? Slay him.

Headsmen.—Kill this man, along with his son.

Cha.—This fool is likely to do anything. Go my son, to your mother.

Roha—What should I do if I were to go?

Cha—You should at once resort to some hermitage taking your mother along with you lest for the fault of your father you too will be reduced to this condition. And you my friend, take him and go. (32)

Mait.—O friend, is this the opinion you have found of me that I will hold my breath without you?

Cha.—Friend, your life is in your power and it is not proper for you to cast it away.

Mait.—(To himself.) It is quite true, but yet I will not be able to live, separated from my dear friend. So I shall hand over the little boy to the Brahman lady, his mother and follow my dear friend even in death. (Aloud.) Friend, I will take this boy away at once. (He embraces Charudatta then falls at her feet. Rohasena does the same weeping.)

Sak.—Aye! Do I not tell you to kill Charudatta, along with his son?

(Charudatta betrays fear.)

Headsmen.—The king's orders to us are not to the effect that Charudatta is to be killed along with his son. Go away boy, go away! (They send him away.) Here is the third place of proclamation. Beat the drums. (They proclaim the sentence again.)

Sak.—(To himself) What! These citizens do not believe it! (Aloud) You fellow, Charudatta these citizens do not believe it. Say it with your own tongue, "I murdered Vasantasena."

(Charudatta remains silent.)

Sak.—Aye, Chandala fellow; this fellow of Charudatta won't speak. Just make him speak, beating him with this old bamboo stick, or with a chain.

Headsmen I—(Raising the stick.) Oh, Charudatta speak!

Cha.—(Mournfully.)

Fallen as I am in this vast ocean of sorrows, I have nither fear nor any mental affliction. But the fire of public-censure does alone pain me to the quick, when I have to declare that I destroyed my beloved. (33).

(Sakara does similarly again.)

Cha.—O! Citizens! (He repeats again. "By me, a cruel sinner etc. etc. etc.")

Sak.—Killed her!

Cha.—So be it!

Chandala I—Aye! It is your turn to kill him.

Chandala II—No, yours.

Chan I.—Well, let us reckon out. (Drawing lines in various ways.) Well, if it is my turn to kill him, then stay just for a minute.

Chan. II—What for?

Chan I—Aye when my father was going to heaven, he told me—"Son Viraka, if it is your turn to kill him, don't kill the victim too quickly."

Chan II—Aye, what for?

[Chan I—Perhaps some good man may give money and liberate the criminal. Perhaps a son may be born to the king to the celebration of which festive occasion all the criminals may be liberated.

Perhaps an elephant may break loose from its chains and the prisoner may be let off in the excitement. Perhaps there may come a change of kings, and all the prisoners may be set free. U

Sak.—What? What? A change of kings?

Chan I.—Well, let us reckon out whose turn it is to kill.

Sak.—Aye! Kill Charudatta very quickly.

(Taking Sthavaraka remains in a retired place)

Chan I.—Noble Charudatta it is the king's orders that are to blame, and not we, two, chandalas. Think then of what you needs must think.

Cha.—I am now slandered by irony of Fate, by the word of men in power and if in spite of it, my virtue is to prevail, may she herself, whether she dwells in heaven or elsewhere, remove out of her natural generous disposition this stigma cast on my name! (34)
Sir where am I to go now?

Chan.—(Pointing ahead.) Here is seen the southern burial ground, even at the sight of which the criminals lose their life. Look! Look!

The big jackals drag one half of the mangled body, while the other half clinging to the gibbet is like a mask of loud laughter. (35)

Cha.—Alas! Unfortunate I am. (He sits down in grief.)

Sak.—I will not go yet. I will just see Charudatta executed.
(Walking about and gazing.)

What! He is seated!

Chan.—Charudatta, are you afraid of death?

Cha.—(Rising hastily) Fool! (He again repeats X 27 I am not afraid of death, but my soiled fame etc, etc.)

Chan.—Noble Charudatta, even the sun and the moon, dwelling in the heavens, are over-taken by disaster, how much more, death-fearing creatures, and men! In this world, those who rise do fall, and those who fall do rise again. From him who rises and falls, his body drops like a garment. Taking these thoughts, you get yourself bold (Towards Chan. II) Here is the fourth place of proclamation. Let us proclaim the sentence, (They shout once again.)

Cha.—Vasantasena! Oh my beloved!

(He repeats again verse 13)

(Enter in great agitation Vasantasena and the mendicant.)

Mendi.—My mendicancy has been graced by me when I had to give life to Vasantasena who fainted in an out of the way place. Disciple of Buddha, whither shall I lead you?

Vas.—Really, to the house of the noble Charudatta. revive me with the sight of him as the water lily is revived by the moon.

Mendi—( To himself. ) By which road shall I enter ? ( Reflecting. ) I shall enter by the King's high-way alone. Worshipper of Buddha, come, here is the King's high-way. ( Listening. ) But what is this great tumult that I hear on the king's high-way ? महान

Vas.—( Observing before her. ) Why, there is a great crowd of people before us ! Pray find out, sir, what it means. All Ujjayini is elevated on one side as if the earth bore an uneven load.

Chan.—Here is the last place of proclamation. Beat drum Proclaim the sentence ! ( They do so. ) Oh, Charudatta, be ready. Don't be afraid. You will die quickly.

Cha.—Ye respectful gods !

Mend.—( Listening in great agitation. ) Worshipper of Buddha, Charudatta is being put to his death because you were murdered by him.

Vas.—( In terror. ) Alas ! Alas ! For my wretched sake the noble Charudatta, put to death ! Sir, quickly lead me thither.

Mend.—O, worshipper of Buddha, hasten, hasten, to comfort the noble Charudatta, while yet he lives. Make way, gentlemen make way !

Vas.—Make way, make way !

Chan.—Noble Charudatta, it is the king's command that is to blame. Think then of what you needs must think.

Cha.—Why waste words ? ( He repeats again X, 34 "I am now slanderd etc. etc.," )

Chan.—( Drawing his sword. ) Noble Charudatta, stand erect and we with one stroke kill you and send you to heaven, ( Charudatta remains erect. )

Chan.—( He raises his arm to strike. The sword falls from his hand. ) What !

I fiercely grasped in my fist my sword that is deadly like the lightning, and yet why did it fall to the ground ? (36)

In as much as this has happened, I infer that the noble Charudatta will not die. Have mercy, O mighty goddess of Sahya hills, have mercy ! If only Charudatta might be saved then the family of us, Chandalas, will be highly favoured.

Chan. II—Let us do as we were ordered.

Chan. I—Well, let us do so.

( They make ready to inpale Charudatta. )

(Charudatta repeats again X, 34 "I am now slandered by irony of etc etc.")

Mendicant and Vasantasena. (Observing what is being done.)
'Gentlemen,' Hold, hold!

Vas.—Good gentlemen! Here I am that unfortunate lady for whose sake he is being put to death.

Chan.—(Perceiving her.)

Who is this woman that runs towards us with dishevelled locks and uplifted arms, and loudly calls on us to forbear? (37)

Vas.—Oh, Charudatta! what does this mean? (She falls on his breast.)

Mendi.—Worthy Charudatta, what does it mean? (He falls at his feet.)

Chan.—(Withdrawing in fear.) What! Vasantasena! How very lucky that we did not put him to death, who was quite innocent.

Mend.—(Rising.) Thank Heaven! Charudatta is alive.

Chan.—And shall live a hundred years.

Vas.—(In joy.) I am brought back to life again.

Chan.—The king is at the place of sacrifice. Let us report to him what has taken place.

The two Chandalas start to go away.

Sak.—(Beholding Vasantasena and trembling with fear.) Ah! Who has restored this slave wench to life? She breathes again quite well. Very well I will run away. (He runs away.)

Chan.—(Approaching) Well, our orders from the king were really to put the man to death who murdered Vasantasena. Let, us therefore, go after the king's brother-in-law.

(Exeunt the two Chandalas.)

Cha.—(In amazement.)

Who is it that comes at this hour, when the weapon is uplifted, and when I am in the jaws of death, like the shower from the Drona-clouds when the crops are parched by drought? (38)

(Beholding her.)

Is this a second Vasantasena? Or has she herself come here from heaven? Or is it owing to the illusion of my mind that I see her? Or is she the same Vasantasena who never died? (39)

Or again.

Did she return heaven with a desire to restore me to life? Or has any one else in her likeness come hither? (40)

Vas.—(Rises in tears and falls at his feet.) Noble Charudatta I am that wretch on whose account you have been reduced to this miserable plight.

(Voices behind the scenes.) A miracle, a miracle! Vasantasena lives. (The bystanders repeat the words.)

Cha.—(Listens, then rises suddenly, embraces Vasantasena and closes his eyes. In a voice trembling with emotion.) My love! you are Vasantasena.

Vas.—That same unhappy woman.

Cha.—(Gazing upon her joyfully.) Can it be Vasantasena herself? (In extreme happiness.)

Whence does she, bathing her breasts with flow of tears, come like the Divine lore to revive me who am within the grasp of death? (41)

My beloved Vasantasena.

It was on your account that this body of mine was about to be destroyed, and by you alone it has been once more liberated. Ah! Marvellous indeed is the efficacy of the union with the beloved. What else can call the very dead to life again?

[And again, behold, my dear, now that you, my beloved, have come again, these emblems (that lately denoted death and shame) are indicative of nuptial joy, this very same crimson vesture shines like the bridegroom's garb, this red garland like the bridegroom's festoon, and these drums resounding fiercely seem to proclaim the joy of marriage. (43)]

Vas.—Indeed, this attempt is the outcome of your extreme generosity.

Cha.—My beloved.

That powerful enemy who had conceived bitter hatred against me long before, and who is doomed to hell, charged that you were killed by me, and almost ruined me. (44)

Vas.—(Closing her ears.) Heaven forbid! By the self same king's brother-in-law I was despatched.

Cha.—(Seeing the mendicant.) Who is this?

Vas.—By that wicked fellow I was despatched, and this respectable gentleman restored me to life.

Cha.—Who art thou, disinterested friend?

Men.—Your honour does not recognize me. I was your honour's shampooer and my name was Samvahaka. I was seized by gamblers for my dues, and this honoured lady redeemed me with her ornaments on the ground that I was your honour's servant. Being disgusted with gambling, I became a Buddhist mendicant.

This honoured lady came to the old garden Pushpakarandaka, by a wrong carriage and was forcibly strangled by that wicked fellow with the noose of his arms because she would not love him. And I saw her there.

( Voices behind the scenes. )

Victory to the Bull bannered god, the despoiler of Daksha's sacrifice ! Glory to the six-faced conqueror, the cleaver of the Krouncha mountain ! And Victorious is now Aryaka, the destroyer of his powerful adversary, over the widespread earth that has white Kailasa for its banner.

Sarvilaka.—( Entering quickly. )—

I slew the cursed King Palaka and quickly installed Aryaka as the sovereign. I respectfully received on my head his orders as a divine residuum of flowers and I am going now to liberate Charudatta from his calamity. (46)

The enemy was vanquished who was abandoned by his army and ministers, the citizens were consoled, and by means of force absolute sway has been won over the whole earth, like Indra, the enemy of Bali ( holds in heaven ). (47)

( Looking in front of him. )

Very well; he must be near at hand by this assemblage of people. Let this attempt of King Aryaka bear the fruit of restoring Charudatta to life. ( Hastening very quickly. ) Fools, make way ! ( Beholding with joy. ) What ! Does Charudatta live,—Vasantasena too ? Really my monarch's wishes have been all fulfilled.

Ah ! Luckily I shall for a long time behold him who is like the moon free from eclipse and accompanied by the moonlight,—him who was borne safely over a boundless ocean of misery by the virtuous and well-behaved beloved, as if by a well-steered boat drawn by the ropes. (48)

How shall I, a great sinner as I am, approach such a lofty individual ? Or rather, straightforwardness shines everywhere. ( Approaching with folded hands. Aloud. ) Respected Charudatta !

Cha.—Who are you, sir ?

Sarv.—I am he who forcibly entered your mansion by effecting a breach thereof, and took away the pledge entrusted to your care, and a great sinner am I, and now do I seek thy refuge. (49)

Cha.—Not so, my friend. Thereby you brought about this friendship between us. ( Embraces him. )

Serv.—Moreover.

The noble Aryaka, the protector of birth and honour, killed the wicked King Palaka, like a victim on the sacrificial ground. (50)

Cha.—What ?

Serv.—He who once got into your chariot, and sought your protection has now killed King Palaka, like a victim at a duly performed sacrifice. ( 51 )

Cha.—Sarvilaka, is this Aryaka the one who was unreasonably brought from the hamlet and kept in confinement by Palaka and who was liberated then by you ?

Serv.—Certainly so.

Cha.—It is a very happy news to me.

[Serv.—The kingdom of Kusavati on the banks of the river Venu has been bestowed on you by your friend Aryaka, as soon as he was installed as king in Ujjayini. Let therefore the request of a friend be first respected. ( Walking about. ) Aye bring along that wretched brother-in-law of the king. ]

( Behind the scenes. )

As Sarvilaka commands.

Sarv.—Worthy sir, the King Aryaka submits that this sovereignty of his was earned through your excellent virtues, and therefore let it be enjoyed by you.

Cha.—What ? Sovereignty obtained through my virtues ?

( Behind the scenes. )

Aye, brother-in-law of the King, come, come, You better enjoy now the fruits of your vicious conduct.

( Then enter Sakara, accompanied by the king's servants, and his arms being tied behind him )

Sams.—Alas ! Alas !

I am bound and dragged along from a distance as if I were a restive ass or a rabid dog. ( Looking in all directions. ) The king's servants are all around me. Therefore helpless that I am where can I take refuge ? ( Reflecting. ) Very well. I will have recourse to him alone who is ever attached to those who seek his protection. ( Approaching ) Worthy Charudatta, protect me, protect me. ( He falls at his feet. )

( Behind the scenes. )

Let him alone, worthy Charudatta: leave him to us, we will despatch him.

Sak.—( Towards Charudatta. ) Oh, refuge of the hepleless, save me, save me.

Cha.—( Compassionately. ) Banish your terror ; no fear to him who seeks refuge with me.

Sarv.—( In excitement. ) Drag him away from near Charudatta.
( To Charudatta. ) Tell us what is to be done to this wretch.

Shall we have him well tied and dragged along and devoured by the dogs or shall we hoist him on the stake or shall we cut him by a saw ? (53)

Cha.—Are you going to abide by whatever I say, in respect of him ?

Sarv.—Why doubt it ?

Sak.—Master Charudatta, I seek thy refuge. Protect me, protect me. You do what shall be most befitting to you. I shall no more act in this way.

( Behind the scene )

( Mob. ) Kill him ! Kill him ! Why should a sinful wretch be suffered to live ?

( Vasantasena takes the garland off Charudatta's neck and throws it on Sakara. )

Sak.—Gentle daughter of a courtesan, have pity upon me ! I will never kill you again. Protect me, protect me.

Sarv.—Take him away. Worthy Charudatta, command us as to what should be done in respect of this sinful wretch.

Cha.—Will you do whatever I say, in respect of him ?

Sarv.—What doubt is there ?

Cha.—Truly ?

Sarv.—Truly.

Cha.—Let him be quickly.

Sarv.—Despatched ?

Cha.—No. No.—Set free.

Sarv.—Why so ?

Cha.—An humbled foe, who prostrates at the feet and seeks refuge, must not be killed by any weapon.

Sarv.—Very well, let him be devoured by dogs.

Cha.—Nay, not so.

His punishment must be mercy. (54)

Sarv.—Oh ! Wonderful ! What shall I do ? Let your Honour speak.

Cha.—Loose him and let him go.

Sarv.—Let him be liberated.

Sams.—Ah, I am again alive. ( Exit he and the king's servants. )

( Voices behind the scenes. )

( Again behind the scenes. )

Alas ! Dhuta, the noble wife of the worthy Charudatta warding off her child clinging to her feet and to her raiment seeks to enter the blazing fire in spite of the entreaties of the weeping crowd.

Sarv.—( Listening and facing the firing room. ) How now Chandanaka, what is this ?

Chan.—Does not your honour see yon crowd collected to the south of the royal palace ? There the noble wife of the worthy Charudatta is about to enter the fire. Moreover, I told her, " Worthy lady, don't make a venture. The worthy Charudatta lives and is safe. " But who in the agonies of grief hears me or believes me ?

Cha.—( In grief. ) Alas, my dear, what is this that you attempt to do, while yet I live ? ( Looking up and sighing deeply. )

Noble lady ! your virtues indeed are celestial and the sinful earth is not a fitting residence for them ; still, faithful dear, it ill-behoves you to enjoy the heavenly bliss and leave the dear husband behind. (56) ( He faints. )

Sarv.—Oh ! what a mishap !

We should at once proceed thither but alow ! he has fainted. Ah ! woe me ! it seems that all conspire to snatch from us the reward of our exertions ( to make our efforts fruitless ) (56)

Vas.—Calm yourself, worthy sir. Hasten yourself to save the worthy lady. Otherwise, want of firmness may bring about much misery.

Cha.—( Regaining his senses and getting up instantly. ) Ah ! my beloved, where are you ? Give me a word of reply.

Cha.—This, way, sir ; this way !

[ Exeunt. ]

( Then enter Dhuta as described, Rohasena holding her garment Vidushaka accompanying them, and Radanika. )

Dhuta.—( Shedding tears. ) Child leave me, don't throw obstacles in my way. I am afraid of hearing any ill that may happen to my lord. ( Rises up and snatching off the end of her garment, walks in front of the fire. )

Roha.—Worthy mother, wait for me : for I cannot keep my life, being deprived of you.

( He quickly approaches her and again clasps her garment. )

Vib.—The sages declare that it is sinful for a Brahman wife to mount a separate pile.

Dhuta.—Better if I sin than hear ill news regarding my husband.

Sarv—( Looking in front of him ) The worthy lady has come very near to the fire. Hasten, hasten.

( Charudatta quickly walks about. )

Dhuta.—Radanika, take hold of my child and I will do my desire.

Rad.—( Mournfully. ) I for one, would precede you in your act.

Dhuta.—( Looking at Vidushana. ) Sir, you better take hold of the child.

Vid.—( In excitement ) If you are intent on carrying out your desires, you must certainly give precedence to a Brahman. Therefore I shall precede you, worthy lady, in your act.

Dhuta.—What, neither listens to me ! ( Embracing the little boy. ) My dear child, you must protect yourself in order to offer libation to us. Of what avail are a man's desires in a matter beyond their reach ? ( Sighing. ) Certainly, your father shall not live to protect you.

Cha.—( Listens and quickly approaches. ). I live to protect the little boy. ( He lifts the child in his arms and embraces him. )

Dhuta.—( Beholding. ) Aye ! There ! The very voice of my lord ! ( Observing carefully and in great joy ) Fortunately, it is my lord alone ! Joy ! Joy !

Child.—( Beholding in great joy. ) Ah ! my father embraces me ; ( To Dhuta. ) Madam, do you prosper. My father lives to protect me. ( He embraces in turn. )

Cha. ( To Dhuta. )

My dearest love, what frenzy drove thee to have recourse to such a desperate venture while thy lord survives ? The tender lotus closes not its petals before the sun is set ( disappeared ).

Dhuta—Worthy sir, hence it is that it is spoken of as being inanimate.

Vid.—( Beholding in joy. ) I see my dear friend with these very eyes ? Wonderful is the effect of chastity ! For, by the very attempt to enter the fire, the union with her lord is obtained. ( To Charudatta. ) May you prosper, my dear friend !

Cha.—Come along Maitreya. ( Embraces him. )

Rad.—How unusual the whole occurrence ! Worthy Sir, I salute you. ( She falls at Charudatta's feet. )

Cha.—( Puts his hand on her shoulder. ) Rise, good Radanika. ( He raises her. )

Dhuta.—( Beholding Vasantasena. ) Fortunately safe art thou, happy sister.

( They embrace each other. )

Sarv.—Luckily, worthy sir, all your friends and relatives are safe.

Cha.—All through your favour.

Sarv.—Worthy Vasantasena, ~~the monarch is highly pleased with you, and honours you with the appellation of a bride.~~

Vas.—Worthy sir, I am grateful.

(Sarvilka throws a veil over her,)

Sarv.—(To Charudatta.) What shall we do for this mendicant ?

Cha.—Sramanaka (monk,) what is thy desire ?

Mend.—Having observed all this change of events, I am attached all the more to the life of a mendicant.

Cha.—Friend, his resolution is firm. Let him be made the head of all the Buddhist monasteries on the earth.

Sarv.—As your Honour bids.

Mend.—I am glad, very glad.

Vas.—I am really alive now.

Sarv.—What shall be done regarding Sthavaraka ?

Cha.—Let him be made a free man: let him be a slave no more. Let the Chandalas be made heads of all Chandalas. Let Chandanaka remain as the principal Commander-in-Chief. That brother-in-law of the king, let him occupy the same post in which he was once employed.

Sarv.—Everything shall be done as your Honour bids, but only leave this fellow to us. We shall put him to death.

Cha.—Protection must be given to him who seeks refuge (He repeats stanza 54.)

Sarv.—Tell us what else is your pleasure.

Cha.—Do any of my wishes yet remain to be fulfilled ?

[ I have regained the purity of my character: this foe that fell at my feet has been set free; King Aryaka, my dearest friend, rules over the universe, having destroyed the enemies; this beloved of mine I have got again; and you, my friend, is re-united, to your beloved friend. What else is there that remains as yet unattained, and that I'd request you to do ? (58). ]

[ This (Omnipotent) fate serving as an illustration of the of the buckets attached to the water-wheel, empties some and fills others to the brim, raises some to affluence and throws some others into penury or perplexes them with difficulties, and sporting thus with human beings, points out the conduct of the world to be made up of inconsistencies. (59.)

However, let there be this भरतवाक्य.

[Let the kine yield milk and let the soil be fertile, may the cloud send down timely showers and gentle winds blow refreshing and gladdening the hearts of all mankind. May every living creature delight and rejoice and the pious Brahmans be constantly revered and honoured. May the prosperous and virtuous monarchs exterminate all their enemies and rule the universe! ### THE CHÁRUDATTA AND THE MRĀCHHAKAṬIKA.

The discovery and publication in the Trivendrum Sankrit Series of thirteen plays ascribed to Bhāsa has created such a sensation and revolutionized the prevailing notions about Sanskrit drama to such an extent that their importance has been epoch-making. So far as the Mr̥cchhakaṭika is concerned, the publication of the Chárudatta or the Daridra-Charudatta has once for all exploded Pischel's theory which ascribed the authorship of the Mr̥cchhakaṭika to Dandin, and has rendered incredible the longcherished opinion that the Mr̥cchhakaṭika is the oldest of Sanskrit dramas. But at the same time the Chárudatta, instead of solving the problem of the Mr̥cchhakaṭika, has rendered it more complicated. The two plays, when compared, present an uncommon phenomenon in Sanskrit literature. [They contain in the first four acts the same plot, the same words, expressions, indential verses and characters, with slight differences here and there, but at the same time possess different titles.] The Chárudatta comes to an abrupt end at the close of the fourth act and the Mr̥cchhakaṭika is carried on to the end of the tenth act to fulfil the requirements of a Prakaraṇa. This continuation renders possible the title Mr̥cchhakaṭika on account of the incident of a clay toy-cart in the concluding act. Nor is the charge of plagiarism levelled against the one or the other. Rhetoricians like Vāmana sometimes quote from the one or from the other, but they never talk slightly of either of them. This has thickened the mystery of the two plays. Now under such circumstances as mentioned above one of the two must be the borrower. The Mṛcchhakaṭika in its prologue mentions the famous king Śūdraka to whom the authorship is ascribed. This prologue can have hardly been written by Śūdraka himself, as it would be absurd on his part to refer to his own death.<sup>1</sup> From the prologue, what can be gathered at the most is that the author of the Mṛcchhakaṭika was Śūdraka and nothing else.<sup>2</sup>

Prof. Konow has recently started a new theory that Śūdraka was an Ābhīra prince called Sivadatta who was perhaps connected with the downfall of the Āndhras and the inauguration of the Chedi-era ( 248-49 ). He has even suggested that the Śūdraka of Bāna's Kadambari, and of the Mṛcchhakaṭika are the same. But this suggestion, however ingenious, is of a very unsubstantial character.<sup>3</sup> Śūdraka is connected with the struggle between Vikramāditya and his opponents; and curiously enough he is said to be a Brahmin minister of king Śātavāhana from whom he received half of his kingdom. The Prologue of the Mṛcchhakaṭika calls him द्विजमुख्यतमः and ककुदं वेदविदां which must refer to a Brāhmaṇa, though our drama does not make any use of the R̥gveda and the Sāmaveda. At the most the epithets show that Śūdraka was a Brahmin by caste and seems to have played the part of a

Peśvá to some Hindu Rájá before he rose to be even by title a ruler himself.<sup>1</sup>

Dr. Charpentier<sup>2</sup> refers to another tradition first noted by Pischel in Vāmana's Kāvyaśamkâra-vṛtti where Śūdraka is called Rájá-Komatih. Now Komatih is the name of a great trading caste in the Madras presidency. By a curious coincidence with the statement in the prologue of the Mṛcchakaṭika, a tradition tells us that 102 heads of the Komatis in their struggle with a king called Viṣṇuvardhana of the Chālukyas sacrificed themselves in fire rather than surrender themselves. If this is conclusively proved, it would place the Mṛcchakaṭika in the early beginning of the seventh century. Profs. Lēvi and Konow assign the Mṛcchakaṭika to the second century A.D. and consider it even earlier than Kālidāsa. But if this would have been the case Kālidāsa would never have failed to mention it along with the works of Bhāsa, Kaviputra and Soumilla. Profs. Jacobi and Jolly<sup>3</sup> have proved that the lawsuit acted in the ninth act could be in accordance with the rules of the law-books of the 6th or 7th century. The state of society depicted in the Daśakumārcharita of Dandin resembles so closely that in the Mṛcchakaṭika that both the works cannot be far removed.

Mr. Mehendale has shown<sup>4</sup> that Bāṇa (604-648A.D.) who refers to Śūdraka, the hero of Vidiśá, does not at all refer to Śūdraka, the dramatist in the introductory verses to the Harśacharita. But Vāmana of the 8th century (cir 775A.D.) cites two quotations one<sup>5</sup> of which agrees better with the Chārudatta, while the other<sup>6</sup> with the Mṛcchakaṭika. Thus the Mṛcchakaṭika was composed during a period extending from the middle of the seventh to that of the eighth century of the Christian era.<sup>1</sup>

Now the most controversial question is about the relation of the Mṛcchakaṭika and the Chārudatta. Dr. Sukthankar, Prof. S. M. Paranpype, T. Ganpati Śāstri, Huprikar Śāstri, Dr. Belvalkar, Prof. Jolly, Dr. Winternitz, Dr. Morgenstierne, Prof. Konow, Dr. Banerjea Śāstri and many other oriental scholars admit the Chārudatta as a genuine work of Bhāsa and consider the Mṛcchakaṭika only as an enlargement of it; while on the other hand, Prof. Kane, Pandit Ramavatāra Śarmā, Pandit Ranga-chārya Raddi, Bhuttanāth Swamin, and Dr. Barnet consider the newly discovered plays as spurious and consider the Chārudatta as an abridgement or adaptation of the Mṛcchakaṭika.

It must be painfully noted that barring the well considered and methodological writings of some of the distinguished Orientalists, many have fallen into the pit of evaluating the merits of the two works only on subjective grounds. The aesthetic beauty of a particular passage can be appreciated by some, while it may fail to appeal to others. Subjective considerations, must therefore, be supplemented by other objective reasons.<sup>2</sup> Dr. Sukthankar,<sup>3</sup> Dr. Morgenstierne,<sup>4</sup> Dr. Charpentier<sup>5</sup> and Prof. S. M. Paranpype<sup>6</sup> have made very useful contributions to the study of the two works and have tried in their own way to prove that the Chārudatta is the original of the Mṛcchakatika. While an absolutely decisive evidence to establish the authorship of Chārudatta and the other twelve plays is not forthcoming, the following tentative criticism on the relation between the two works is offered to the readers.

The criticism will be carried on taking into consideration, (1) the changes in the plots, characters, events, (2) linguistic considerations, change in words, phrases, verses, Prakṛts (3) other minor considerations.

It is a very noteworthy thing that the Chārudatta as published at present is without the Nāndi or the Bharatavākya. According to the rules of Bharata's Nāṭyaśāstra, a play must open with a Nāndi or the benedictory verse and must close with the Bharatavākya or the epilogue. Now this may be due to the unsatisfactory condition of the manuscript or to the mistakes of the scribe. An internal examination of the thirteen plays clearly shows that they are from the pen of the same author. Out of those one play is called the Vāsavadattā. Now राजशेखर in a couplet says that one of the plays of Bhāsa was called the Vāsavadattā.<sup>1</sup> वामन quotes a<sup>2</sup> verse from the Vāsavadattā which is found in the present Vāsavadattā. Similarly सर्वानन्द in his टीका on अमर refers to the kinds of शृङ्गार in the वासवदत्ता and अभिनवगुप्ताचार्य in his भारतनाट्यवेदविवृति refers to the कन्दुकक्रीडा in the वासवदत्ता. Now the वासवदत्ता published in the Trivendrum Sanskrit series satisfies all these conditions and as one वासवदत्ता is said to be composed by Bhāsa, this must be the same वासवदत्ता.

Mr. Banerjea Śāstri has shown that another play of this Series viz. the अविमारक has been referred to by वात्स्यायन in his कामसूत्रs.<sup>1</sup> The चारुदत्त too is mentioned by Vāmana, but till it is established that it is older than the मृच्छकटिक, this circumstance is not of much use. Suffice it to say that as the Vāsavadattā is mentioned by old writers as belonging to Bhāsa and as the Avimāraka is referred to by Vātsyāyana of the second or third century A.D. and all the plays including the Chārudatta are written by one person, they must all be composed by Bhāsa.

The Chārudatta, as mentioned above is without the prologue and the epilogue and thus the question arises whether it is complete or is only a fragment. A critical examination of the work by Dr. Sukthankar<sup>2</sup> and Professor Paranjpye has conclusively proved that it is a fragment, though Dr. Charpentier does not attach much weight to one of the points of evidence.<sup>3</sup> This verse is interpreted as forestalling the undeserved punishment of Chārudatta in act IX. Similarly Dr. Charpentier dismisses with scant courtesy the words of Vasantsenā to the monk, as in his opinion they do not allude to the future, but are of a formal nature.<sup>4</sup> But Dr. Sukthankar defends these words on the ground that संवाहक has been placed under obligation by Vasantsenā and in the Chārudatta he leaves her presence without saying a word of thanks in return. It is therefore, natural that he should return once more to pay off his debt of gratitude to the heroine, and the words above quoted contain a distinct indication of the intention of the author to reintroduce the character at a later stage of the drama. Other points in question are:—The events narrated in the four acts of the Chārudatta are of a very humdrum character and are deficient in the organic connection between character and plot, in the attempt at grouping round a passion which is natural to a love drama. Now here does the action reach a climax as it does in the eighth act of the Mrechhakaṭika. If, therefore, the Chārudatta is to be looked upon as a work worthy of the pen of the author of the Svapna-Vāsavadattā and the Pratijnā-yaugandharāyaṇa, it must be assumed that the later acts of the play which yet remain to be discovered complete with a worthy denouement. In spite of the dissenting note of Dr. Charpentier, the following passages show, that the Chārudatta is a fragment and the author had an intention of continuing the play, if he has not already completed it.

(1) In act II Vasantsenā obliged Sainvāhaka by paying off his debt to the gamblers. He then wanted to do some good turn to her, but she was not willing to receive it. He then utters words of protest<sup>1</sup> and goes away to become a Buddhist monk. An opportunity is given for him in the eighth act of the Mr. The author of the Chārudatta would not have put the above words in his mouth, if he wanted to stop the play at the end of Act IV.

(2) Similarly in Act IV when Vasantsenā hands over Madanikā to Sajjalaka, the latter thinks that he must also do something for her.<sup>2</sup> This shows that the author of the Chārudatta wanted to give Sajjaka an opportunity later on.

(3) In Act IV a Cheti describes that Śākara's carriage had arrived at the door of Vasantasenā to carry her to his mansion. Vasantasenā becomes angry and puts on an Abhisārikā's dress to meet Chārudatta, but feels nervous at the prospect of the Durdina.<sup>1</sup> From this it is clear that the author wanted to describe the Durdina and Abhisarāṇa later on which is done in the fifth act of the Mr.

2. नरः प्रत्युपकारार्थं विपत्तौ लाभते फलम् । द्विषतामेव कालोऽस्तु योऽस्या भवतु तस्य वा ॥

(4) At the end of Act IV there is no Bharatavākya, but on the other hand, there are numerous indications like above which show that the play is a fragment.

(5) Moreover why was Śakāra introduced as a rival of Chārudatta and not any swashbuckler? His threats are not merely empty, when he threatens. This coupled with his sending in the carriage in Act IV show that his passion for Vasantasenā had not yet subsided and he wanted to take revenge which is done in Acts VIII and IX of the Mr. A similar incident must have taken place in the Chārudatta.

But the task is not complete here. It may still be urged that the Chārudatta is an abridgement or an adaptation of the Mr. But<sup>2</sup> this opinion too will not stand a critical inquiry. The extent of the four acts of the Chārudatta when compared with that of the Mr., will at once make it clear that the former cannot be an abridgement of the latter. Abridgment requires that the proportion between the two works must be at least of two to one. But the extent of the four acts of the Mr. is nearly the same as that of the four acts of the Chārudatta. The theory of abridgement is, therefore, an absurd theory. Moreover if the Mr. is prolix in some passages, the Chārudatta is equally prolix in others, especially in prose passages. Neither can it be an adaptation of the Mr., because, as will be shown later on, all good improvements are to be found invariably in the Mr. It is a generally accepted opinion that the later the production, the superior it becomes in quality. The only course left is that the Mr. is an enlargement of the Chārudatta. Dr. Charpenter thinks that the Cha.

2. णादआइत्थिआवण्णत्तेणिआ णाम...मडमडाइम् । consisted only of five acts which culminate in the meeting of the lovers. He relies mainly upon the verses in the Prologue.<sup>1</sup> The first verse simply tells us the names of the hero and the heroine, the second tells us that Śûdraka composed the drama based on their happy sexual enjoyment, wherein he exhibited the efficacy of righteous conduct, villainy of law, the temperament of the wicked and inevitableness of fate.<sup>2</sup> The sexual enjoyment clearly refers to the meeting of the lovers in Act V and the other items refer to the acts VIII-X. Thus what Śûdraka did compose was the last five acts, the first five being borrowed from the older play.<sup>3</sup>

(1) Time analysis of the two plays:—According to Wilson, the events of the Mr. took four days; according to Professor Paranjpye the events must have taken only five days. In the first act of the Chârudatta, the author has tied down the events to Śaṣṭhi<sup>4</sup> as the ornaments were deposited by Vasantasena on the Śaṣṭhi, Radanika was to guard them on the Saptamī and Vidûṣuka on the Aṣṭamī. Śûdraka uses a vague expression.<sup>5</sup> In the Chârudatta there is inconsistency between the moonrise of the Śaṣṭhi in the first act and the setting of the moon in the third act. However Śûdraka has retained one specific reference in the third act. In the third act of the Chârudatta occurs the reference to a fast on the sixth day.<sup>6</sup> But Śûdraka turns it into a Ratnaśaṣṭhi, so that the offering of the necklace by Dhûtá and the Vidûṣaka, should be a fitting act for that day. Moreover this reference to Śaṣṭhi in the third act does not create any difficulty about the time of the first and second acts.

The fourth act of the Chârudatta must have taken place on the Navami, as the robbery took place on the night of the eighth day. Śûdraka too does not make any change.

According to Prof. Paranjpye the fifth act took one day and the remaining acts lasted only for a day. Thus the time analysis of the play is either five days or twenty days.

Another case where the Mr. shows a marked improvement in the selection and arrangement of the incidents of action is in act I where the conversation of the hero with the Vidûṣaka and the former's remarks on poverty come to an abrupt end by the scene introducing Vasantasenâ. But in the Mr. this is improved by the intention of the Nâyaka to concentrate his mind.<sup>1</sup> This device serves to connect the events in a sequel.

A third case is in the fourth act of the Chârudatta where Sajjalaka comes to the house of Vasantasenâ to buy Madanikâ's freedom. He stands outside the house and calls out to his love, who is waiting on the heroine. It is very strange that Madanikâ hears him but not the heroine though both of them are in the same place. In the Mr. this mistake is improved by the fact that Śarvilaka (Sajjalaka of the Châr.) stands outside the house and bides his time to meet his love, who is sent out on an errand by the heroine and is seen by her lover while she is returning.

AMPLIFICATION.—The Mr. amplifies a few prose passages of the Châr. in verses as well as in prose passages. The instances of the former class are Mr. I. 11. 16; II. 20, III. 8. These verses show that the Mr. borrows from the Châr; otherwise it would be improper to believe that the author of the Mr. should have omitted a series of verses whose contents he must have used.

The description of courts in the Mr. is amplified from a few hints in the Châr.

In the case of identical verses like III. 7 and many identical sentences, these might have been added later on in the Mr.

With respect to the verses peculiar to the Mr. they are amplifications of short descriptive passages in the Châr.

OMISSION.—Where the Châr. omits verses found in the Mr. the author of the former work thinks them unintelligible e. g. Châr. I. 1 and 20; III. 7-12, 16, 18.

Sometimes in parallel passages, the Mr. simplifies the connection e. g. in act I. of the Châr., the maid next to Vita seizes and hands them over to the Śakâra; but in the Mr. she seizes herself. In the beginning of the third act of the Mr., the servant only comes out, but in the Châr., first the servant comes out and then the maiden. In the Mr. the monologue of Śarvilaka has been set forth only once.

But sometimes the Châr. shows better judgment. e. g. Châr. I. 7 fits in the context better and the author of the Mr. has shown a want of taste in transferring it to the third act. The transposition of scenes between Sajjalaka and Vasantasenâ and between Vidûşaka and Vasantasenâ in the fourth act of the Mr., make an unoriginal impression. Śarvilaka must wait in the temple of the goddess of love till he is allowed in. This is better brought out in the Châr.

Sometimes the bold charges of the Mr. have unexpected results e. g. Châr. I. 2 10; III. 8 and 10; etc.

The transposition of scenes in the fourth act rests mainly on the introduction of the Âryaka episode.

CHANGE IN VERSIFICATION.—In parallel verses the Mr. invariably shows better reading.<sup>1</sup>

VOCABULARY.—The Châr. uses many obscure words, while the Mr. has only one rare form, viz. Attha kalla vatta. The word Kalyavarta appears only once in the Svapnavâsavadattâ of Bhâsa, while it is very common in the Mr.

Prâkrt—~~As regards the Prâkrt, the Châr. retains the old Prâkrt forms as against the Mr. which contains invariably middle Prâkrt.~~<sup>1</sup>

(a) The absolutive of the verbs 'Gam and kr'—Châr. has the old forms gacchia and Karia (and Kaliâ), while the Mr. has gadua and kadua.

(b) Pronoun of the first person—In Châr. is found

1. Sukthankar—J.A.O.S. 1922. p. 63-64 and Printz—Prakrt of Bhâsa and Banerjea Śastri—J.B.O.R.I. 1923, March.

the old Prākṛt form Ahaké instead of hage or hagge, while the Mr. has always Hage or Hagge but never Ahakè.

(c) Pronoun of the second person:—The Chār. has the old Prākṛt 'Tuvam', while the Mr. contains 'Tumam'.

(d) The Neut. plu. of the Nom. and Acc. of thematic stems ends in Chār. (as in Aśvaghoṣa in 'āni'; while in the Mr. it ends in 'āim').

(e) ASSIMILATED CONJUNCTS:—are retained in Chār. as in the fragments of the Buddhistic dramas. e. g. Diśśadi = Mr. Diśanti. The form diśśa is never met with in the Mr. which uniformly uses diś (dis.)

(f) The Chār. throughout uses geha; the Mr. has ghala. The old Prākṛt āma is found in the Chār, but never in the Mr. The Chār. contains Tatsamas and Tadbhāva words, the Mr. contains Deśi words like chiviā, Dhakkehi, Uddhehi, Karatta—Dāini.

The circumstance that some of the words and forms are found only in the Turfan manuscripts and in the Pāli; but not in the later dramas is a strong proof for the antiquity of the Chār. over that of the Mr.

Another circumstance to which Jacobi has drawn attention is the absence of Mahārāstrī Prākṛt in the Chār., while it is found in the Mr. He has gone so far as to say that the Trivendrum dramas were written before the origin of the Mahārāstrī Prākṛt. It must be, however, remarked that some Mahārāstrī words are found in the Bālarita of this group. According to Bharata's Nāṭyaśāstra, women, when they speak in verse, are to use the Mahārāstrī; and in the Chār., Vasantasenā gets an opportunity to speak in metrical speech, but not in the Mahārāstrī Prākṛt; while in the Mr. she uses it. This also shows the lateness of the Mr.

Remarkable also is the fact that the Prastāvanā of the Mr. is in Prākṛt as is unusual in the Sanskrit dramas. The Prastāvanā of the Châr. is in Prākṛt. The Mr. therefore, in using a Prākṛt prologue against the general vogue, clearly implies that it is using the Châr. as a model; otherwise this circumstance cannot be satisfactorily explained.

TECHNIQUE.—According to the Nāṭyaśāstrā, every drama must begin with a Nāndī; but the Châr. contains none. Similarly according to the same treatise every Rûpaka must conclude with Bharatavākya or the Epilogue. In the case of the Châr. however, though the clause ‘Avasitam Chârudattam’ occurs in some manuscripts, the Bharatavākya is not at all found. The latter circumstance may be due to the drama being unfinished and the ignorance of the scribe; but there is no justification for the former omission. It, therefore, points to a period when the use of Nāndī was optional.

THE TITLES.—The title of the drama in the Châr. is also natural. According to the Nāṭyaśāstra, the title of the drama ought to be in accordance with the prominent subject matter. Now in the Châr., the important theme with which the piece opens and to which the love episode is subordinate is the Poverty of the hero. Similarly the personality of the hero is present and prominent throughout the major portion of the drama. Hence the title Chârudatta or Daridra Chârudatta is more natural. In the Mr., however, the name is given after a very minor episode at the end of drama. The reader is never face to face to the significance of the name till he has travelled through the long labyrinth of the successive scenes and acts. This shows that the reviser of the drama found it necessary to change the old title in order to stamp his own personality on the enlarged piece.

CHARACTERS.—While the characters in the Châr. are more natural and painted with a few bold strokes, in the Mr. there appears a studied effort to idealize and exaggerate them. Chārudatta in the Caru. is nobler and more ideal than Chārudatta, in the Mr. He assumes a very humble rôle in act III when he offers his slavish excuse for treating her as a servant. He is too courteous to the sleeping servant. He saves the broker so that he should not be discovered by the watchkeepers. References to his character as in Chār. III. 16, 18 are omitted in the Mr. so that he should not be seen in an unfavourable light.

VASANTASENÂ.—She is described in the Mr. as being more humble and devoted than in the Chār. She allows herself to be shut behind the door like an ordinary servant. In the concluding scene of act IV her condition is made more touching.

The gambler is painted in the Mr. as possessed of nobler instincts than in the Chār. The amazement and regret of Chārudatta over the theft are more exaggerated and unnatural in the Mr. than in the Chār. The Vidûṣaka is more grotesque in the Mr. than in the Chār. The Śakāra in the Mr. is more stupid and rough. In the Mr. in act I the passages are omitted where in the Chār., the Śakāra praises the skill of Vasantasenâ. The Vita is more resolute in the Mr. than in the Chār. The passages in Chār. I. 13, 14 where he makes side remarks to help Vasantasenâ are omitted in the Mr. The darker back-ground and roughness assigned to him in the Chār. are now transferred to the Cheta in the Mr. The wife of Chārudatta comes out suddenly in the Chār., while in the Mr. she is called out. The acceptance of the pearl-necklace is more natural in the Mr. than in the Chār.

It is, therefore, clear that the Mr. is an amplification of the Chār. for (1) in point of technique the Chār. differs from the Mr. in the absence of a Nāndī and in having a rudimentary Sthāpanā. (2) The Prakṛt of Chār. is more archaic than that of the Mr., (3) With regard to versification, the text of the Mr. makes an advance over the other in respect of (a) grammatical mistakes (b) elimination of redundancies (c) and awkward construction (d) introduction of improvements in form and substance. (4) Suitable additions and omissions—The Mr. presents a text more free than many of the flaws, unrealities and inconsistencies in action of the Chár.<sup>1</sup>

Dr. Winternitz draws attention<sup>2</sup> to the circumstance that in the Mr. deeper sympathy is shown towards Buddhism than in the Chár. The author of the Chár is a champion of orthodox Brahmanism and tries to ridicule Buddhist monks where he finds an opportunity.<sup>3</sup> Dr Winternitz surmises hereby that the name Śûdraka is really that of a Śûdra who found better treatment from Buddhism than from the orthodox religion. It is a well known fact that Buddhism, by discarding caste, appealed more fervently to the masses and converted the lower strata of Hindu Society. This circumstance also accounts for the fact that the low-life realism in the Mr. is better depicted in the Mr. than in the Chár. The author of the Mr. seems to move among and to be really interested in the lives of such persons as Máthuraka, Samvâhaka and the like. The Mr. here shows a later phase of Hindu society than that in the Chár. and is thus later than the latter.

Dr. Sukthankar then places the two alternatives before the readers and asks them which is more probable and acceptable. 'Let us assume for the sake of argument that Châr. contains old materials upon which the author of the

Mr. worked.....The difference in the technique neither supports nor contradicts such an assumption. The Nāndī may have been lost. The words 'Nāndyante tataḥ praviśati Sūtradhārah' do not militate against such a supposition. Again we cannot in the present state of our knowledge, rightly evaluate the absence of all references to the name of the play and the play-wright in the Sthāpanā. To say that in preclassical times this was the practice is begging the question. The only technique of introduction we are familiar with is the classical one.

We are, therefore, bound to admit that we have at present no clear evidence that can enable us to place with any degree of assurance chronologically or topographically, a drama with the technical peculiarities of the Chār. But the priority of the Chār. version would satisfactorily explain all the differences between the two plays. It would explain the presence of archaisms in the Prākṛt of the Chār., the improvement in verse etc. as the insistent demand was for a scrupulous purity of language and it would also explain differences in action.

Take the next alternative. On this assumption, it is not at first clear how the Chār. should happen to contain Prākṛt forms older than those to be found in (what is alleged to be a) still older play. We have to regard the Chār. as the version of a different province or of a different literary tradition which had not accepted the innovations in Prākṛt that later became prevalent. This does not, however, make the Chār. version older than the Mr. The Prākṛt archaisms of the Chār. may be said to be not irreconcilable with the general priority of the Mr.

It is much more difficult to explain why the Mr. should invariably offer better readings. Why should, therefore, be a change and always for the worse in the Chār.? Let us combine the archaisms of the Prākṛt with the imperfections of the verse. On the assumption of the posterity of the Chār., we are asked to believe that while the compiler of the Chār. had carefully copied out from older Mss. all the Prākṛt archaisms, he had systematically mutilated the Sanskr̥t verses which is Reductio ad absurdum.

The supposed priority of the Mr. breaks down completely when we try to account for the inconsistencies in the action of the Chār. in general and in particular the Tithī scheme which serves no purpose aesthetic or didactic. By supposing that the original contained no such scheme, can anybody pretend to give a satisfactory reason for the deliberate introduction of the Tithī scheme ?

From this we can reasonably explain the evolution of the Mr. version from the Chār. version, but not vice versa. The special appeal to this hypothesis lies in the fact that it explains not merely isolated variations, but whole categories of them. Here is only a prima facie case that the Chār. is the older version and (as a corollary) if the Chār. is not the original of the Mr., then we must assume that it has preserved a great deal of the original upon which the Mr. is based.<sup>1</sup>

About Śūdraka's changes in general, Dr. Charpentier says, 'A quantity of verses have been added and several passages made more extensive in comparison with the original e. g., the scene of Śarvilaka's burglary in the third act. In the V act, the original of which we do not possess, one may feel quite sure that the whole conversation between the Viṭa and Vasantasenā is a later addition as it only causes a tedious interruption and is absolutely of no importance to the development of the dramatic action. Moreover the whole scene between the gamblers in act II and the description of Vasantasenā's palace in act IV are not at all found in the Chār. They both seem to be more at home in that dramatic genre called Prahasana, and it is specially to be observed that the very indecent words of Māthura and Maitreya that are found in some of the passages of these two episodes do not belong to the style of the Prakaraṇa. We have also the very clear statement of Dhanika<sup>1</sup> that it is the presence of such shady character as Māthura that make the Mr. a Saṃkīrṇa prakaraṇa. And one might well doubt whether we have not here later interpolations that were added by some stage-director in order to secure to the play a greater popularity with the public.<sup>2</sup> Dr. Morgenstierne has shown that in the tenth act of the Mr. same passages have been added by one Nīlakanṭha.<sup>3</sup>

One more point and the investigation to close. It is a mysterious question as to what motive Śūdraka had in interweaving the political episode. It is very loosely connected in the plot. It is already referred to in the second act by Darduraka.<sup>4</sup> And in the fourth act where Śarvilaka comes to know that king Pālaka has incarcerated Āryaka and announces his intention of liberating him. But if these lines are struck off, the greater portion of the sixth and the whole of the seventh act and the last portion of the tenth act are eliminated, there would be no trace of the political intrigue without any prejudice to the development of the dramatic action. One person alone, namely, Sajjalaka or Śarvilaka is connected with the main plot and the byplot, and he would never have been able to show his gratitude to Vasantasenā if he had not joined the party of Āryaka.

The next question is who were Âryaka and Pālaka. Wilson believed long ago<sup>1</sup> that some historical fact lay at the foundation of the story and that Pālaka had through sympathies with the Buddhists and contempt to Bráhmín laws and ceremonies, himself caused the revolution that brought him out of kingdom and life. Charpentier demurs to this view.<sup>2</sup> No doubt Pālaka by condemning to death Chârudatta, had committed a sin against the Brahmins, but there is no allusion in the drama to his embracing Buddhism. On the other hand his brother-in-law, the Śakára abuses every Buddhist whenever he finds an opportunity. Moreover Pālaka was slain in a sacrificial enclosure.<sup>3</sup> The theory of Wilson, at least its latter part, does not find support.

Windisch once opined that here was an influence of Kṛṣṇa and Kāṁsa legends; but this is very vague.

Prof. Konow<sup>4</sup> thinks that here is an adaptation of a story in the Bṛhatkathá, where it is stated that a king Pālaka abdicated in favour of the son of his brother Gopála. He thinks that the name Gopála might have been altered into gopála 'cowherd' which is the profession of Âryaka. But says Dr. Charpentier, "The parallel traits in the two stories are not very striking, and if it were not the name Pālaka, one would scarcely think of bringing them in connection with each other".<sup>5</sup>

Finally Pro. D. R. Bhandarkar has proved that Pālaka and Âryaka were really historical personages and the theory about a political revolution propounded by Wilson had truth in it.

3. Mr. X 50.

4. Das Indische Drama p. 57.

5. J.R.A.S. 1923, p. 606.

Dr. Charpentier thinks that this interweaving serves no purpose but shows only a bad taste. For Vasantasenā could as well have mistaken the carriage without Āryaka being there and Chārudatta's innocence would have been obviously proved by her reappearance even without the intercession of Śarvilaka.<sup>2</sup>

Dr. Morgenstierne, by the by, traces the influence of Kālidasa's Mālavikāgnimitra in Mr. which is absent in the Chār.<sup>3</sup>

The influence of the Trivendrum dramas is seen in the Bharatavākya of the Mr. where almost parallel expressions and identical sentiments are to be seen.

Thus the foregoing examination shows that the Mr. of Śudraka is indebted to the Chār. which is generally ascribed to Bhāsa to whom is assigned the third century of the Christian era. This theory has, therefore, to be accepted until something more authentic is forthcoming to reverse the order.

APPENDIX II.

EXTRACTS FROM SYLVAIN LÉVI'S LE THÉÂTRE INDIEN.

---

“ We have until now left aside in our history, a drama and a poet whom people are accustomed to see placed, by right of antiquity at the head of Indian stage. Current opinion, in Europe atleast considers शूद्रक as a predecessor of Kālidāsa and the मृच्छकटिक as anterior to शाकुंतल. It is a presumption which does not rest upon any solid basis; generally accepted without dissension. It leads astray those who attempt to follow the evolution of the dramatic species in India. The prologue which attributes the play to शूद्रक hardly merits any confidence, since it relates the death of the poet who wrote it. “ When the king attained the age of hundred years and ten days, he entered fire.” This anamoly, far from turning aside the commentators, has seduced them; because it gives them an occasion to unfold all the subtleties. लहरीदीक्षित gravely explains that शूद्रक uses the past tense with reference to the stage director who recites the stanza. He had foreseen the precise date of his death by studying his horoscope and he noted it beforehand for all future generations. A pandit of grave sciences who knew European works महेशचन्द्र न्यायरत्न has recently supported once more this interpretation before the Bengal Asiatic Society (Proceedings Aug. 1887). However he proposes another explanation if the first is rejected. Entrance of the king in fire would correspond to the ceremony called अभिसमारोपण which is practised at the moment of embracing ascetic life.

Windisch, who admits or rather lays down as a principle, the antiquity of this drama could not however help remarking the strangeness of encomiums heaped upon शूद्रक.” He knew R̥gveda, Sāmaveda, calculation, the art of managing elephants and the art of courtezans. “It is from the date of the play, observes Windisch, that the knowledge of the author has been re-established.

The name of शूद्रक is as familiar to literature as it is unknown to literary history. He is, like विक्रमादित्य the hero or rather the centre of a vast cycle of tales. Sometimes he reigns at विदिशा (Kādamb.), sometimes at शोभावती (कथासरित्सागर) sometimes at वर्धमान (वेताळ<sup>०</sup>). A legend which is found in several collections कथासरित्सागर 78; वेताळ<sup>०</sup> 4; हितोपदेश 3 represents him as saved from an imminent death by the sacrifice of a Brahmin, who kills himself in order to assure to the king a life of hundred years. The दशकुमारचरितम् p. 100 makes a brief allusion to the adventures of शूद्रक in several successive existences; the हर्षचरितम् briefly recalls to the mind the dexterous means which he made use of in order to make चन्द्रकेतु, the prince of चकोर (74) his enemy, disappear. The राजतरङ्गिणी mentions him with विक्रमादित्य as a type of firmness; Puranas know his name; the स्कन्धपुराण makes him reign before Nandas in the year of Kali 3290 (189 A. D. ) 710 years before विक्रमादित्य. Two precursors of Kālidāsa, रामिल and सोमिल had jointly composed a legend of शूद्रक ( शूद्रक-कथा see supra page 60 ). Thus from this period the personage of शूद्रक had no reality and belonged entirely to the fable. On the other hand, the name of शूद्रक is found cited for the first time as the name of an author in the काव्यालंकारसूत्रवृत्ति of Vāmana, who wrote in the second half of the 8th Century, under the rule of जयपीड whose minister he was.

It is certainly the मृच्छकटिक from which several verses are cited as examples in the treatise of वामन. Bāna does not mention him in the preface to हर्षचरित in which he praises the great writers who have preceded him; कालिदास does not name him in the मालविकाग्निमित्र among the famous dramatists. His reputation was not certainly established in the middle of the 7th Century. Does the character of the play prevent the fixing of its date between these two extreme limits बाण and वामन ? M. C. Kellner has collected the arguments alleged in favour of the antiquity of मृच्छकटिक. Some are of the literary class, others of social. The simplicity of language, weakness of composition, abundance of episodes, subdivision of action, the development of certain characters of one part, and the manners of the personages; the state of society and a considerable influence of the Buddhism of the other, have seemed to distinguish this drama from all others and to reveal a period anterior to the classical period of stage.

The play is a comedy of invention ( प्रकरण ) of the miscellaneous type ( संकीर्ण ). It is a drama out of the poet's imagination and does not rest upon any epic or mythical legend; it has a Brahmin for the hero and two heroines; one a courtesan and the other a legitimate wife of the hero. This kind is little represented in the dramatic works which we know, beyond मालतीमाधव of which we shall speak presently, we have only found the following Prakaraṇas; मलिकामास्त by उदण्डकवि, पुष्पभूषित् and तरङ्गदत्त or रङ्गदत्त. We also know, from a verse in सूक्तिमुक्तावलि that, शिवस्वामी one of the poets protected by अवन्तिवर्मा ( 857-884 B. C. ) had composed several Prakaraṇas. The small number of works cited with this qualification in the catalogue of manuscripts is easily explained by the frequent confusion of the प्रकरण with नाटक; indeed except the मृच्छकटिक the known प्रकरण are of the pure kinds; with the characters of elevated rank, the distinction between the two kinds is then almost entirely effaced. The title of the play recalls a circumstance of an episodic scene: the clay cart which वसन्तसेना fills with jewels to silence रोहसेन. This circumstance, it is true, is every important, as the jewels in the 9th act serve as proofs against चारुदत्त.

[ The analysis of the story of the drama that follows next, is given at the commencement of each Act in the Notes.]

The historical arguments drawn from morals put in the scene has little value. We have already had an occasion to observe it with regard to मालविका. The Indian Society has certainly never resembled a picture which मृच्छ० traces in it. It is natural enough to believe that in the times of शूद्रक so remote as one may imagine it, the shepherds could not without intrigues reach royalty within a space of three days; that the courtezans, even among the most beautiful of Ujjain had no places as vast and as sumptuous as the residence of वसन्तसेना and the last that the robbers, even the most experienced could not pride themselves in operating with the scientific method of शर्विलक. The intense life with which शूद्रक animates action and personage gives illusion to reality, one believes oneself to be in the middle of beautiful Ujjain but a comparison with the literature of tales dispels this error. We are, as in the rest of Indian stage amid full convention, and amid full fantasy.

The types and manners of मृच्छ० are borrowed from the imaginary world of tales and romances agreeing with the theory of these literary kinds. It is not only to the dramatic art that India has applied her genius of classification and her minute patience; fine arts, ordinary trades and professions even the vilest have had since early times their theoreticians and legislators; the advice of a mediator composed in the reign of जयपीड by दामोदरगुप्त (8th century), the कलाविलास and the समयभातृका by क्षेमेन्द्र, poetic imitations of the preceding works clearly show the character of these technical lessons; the दशकुमार० of Dandin (7th century) mentions a treatise on robbery by a legendary pick-pocket called कर्णसुत or कलांकुर, or मूलभद्र or still more मूलदेव.

The story of the loving courtesan foolishly attracted towards a poor youth is one of those stories which humanity is never weary of hearing. The बृहत्कथा relates how a rich girl रुपिणिका took passion for a poor Brahmin लोहजंघ without taking into account the advice of her mother who was an experienced woman, how the old woman sent away the poor lover, and what vengeance he took upon her later on; besides the tale recalls in a striking manner, मृच्छ०; the beautiful कुमुदिका loves a poor Brahmin whom the king of Ujjain has sent to prison; she clings to the fortune of the dethroned prince विक्रमसिंह, helps him with his subsidies to reconquer his throne, and the re-established sovereign sets free the prisoner, and marries the lovers. In the दशकुमार०-VI-रागमञ्जरी though the daughter of a courtesan wants to marry a man young and poor, but honest; and the mother made disconsolate by this freak of her daughter appeals to the king to bring back her daughter to duty.

The episodes of action in our drama have nothing more precise nor positive like a picture of manners; the बृहत्कथा and दशकुमार० abound in stories of players; game was the amusement of India from legendary period; the hero of महाभारत-युधिष्ठिर, Duty incarnate, places at stake his wife the virtuous द्रौपदी and loses her; the दशकुमार० (II) describes the gaming house with its feverish agitation and constant quarrels; in सोमदेव (XII; 92) a ruined player incapable of paying his debts and beaten unmercifully by the owner of the gaming house, (XVIII, 121), succeeds in running away and takes refuge in an empty temple of शिव (a शून्यालय temple without image); this is the situation in मृच्छ० the picturous details which give so much life and truth to the scene of robbery are found word for word in the romance of दण्डी (II, after the description of gaming house); an experienced robber, armed with necessary instruments, "a thread for measuring a box of winged insects to put out the lights etc."; makes the hole in the wall steals a chest and returns without being perceived; opening of a hole in the wall is a procedure very much in use (दशकुमार० II and पूर्वपीठिका III.) The pictures of judgment and of execution have no more bearing with reality than the scene of tribunal and corporal punishment in our contemporary melodramas. The political intrigue which develops parallelly with action and which brings its catastrophe has certainly been inspired to शूद्रक less by the spectacle of contemporary revolutions than by the practise of popular tales. Mr. Windisch has pointed out strange bearings between the story of आर्यक and the legend of कृष्ण, the shepherd whom the predictions of sooth-sayers call to royalty, whom a jealous tyrant imprisons and who at last triumphs over his enemy, resembles closely the son of वसुदेव in strife with कंस; but the story of कृष्ण is only a special case of this so frequent a theme, and शूद्रक undoubtedly might have been surprized at the comparison drawn by Mr. Windisch. He did not suspect the least resemblance between वसन्तसेना and योगनिद्रा, between the exchange of litters and that of children.

The मृच्छ. is, in short, only a tale divided in acts and scenes and adopted to the Indian manner, stuffed with incidents and episodes. The poet has used the ordinary procedure to fill up ten acts corresponding to ten big divisions of the actions, he has heaped up in them stanzas of dignified poetic style or of description. The first half of the first act describes in full the miseries of poverty, the scene of pursuit describes flight. The comic part comes out above all from the difference of accounts among the personages who express the same idea, the शकार, the विट or the slave; the act finishes with the description of moon-rise. The stanzas of the second act describe the consequences which passion of game involves and the fury of an escaped elephant; those of the third describe the qualities of the musician, the moonset, and formulate the art of robbing; the fourth gives a series of maxims upon women and courtezans; then comes a very long description of eight courts which मैत्रेय crosses in वसन्तसेना's palace. शूद्रक perhaps wanted here to vie with the memory of one of his predecessors; a passage of कथासरित्सागर describes the seven zones of the palace of the courtesan मदनमाला; it was undoubtedly a common spot in this kind of literature. The fifth act is entirely full of the description of thunderstorm in its bearing with love. चारुदत्त and वसन्तसेना and the विट resume this theme turn by turn. It is useless to push further this analysis; it is evident that the poet has like कालिदास and भवभूति conveyed in this drama the descriptive process of the masterly epic poems.

The मृच्छ० implies the same state of literary development as other classical works of Indian stage. The language compared to that of कालिदास does not betray any characteristic difference; it is clear and simple, without studied elegance or affectation; the compounds are formed of three or four terms at the most and has never an excessive length which भवभूति loves to give them: but this simplicity is not a chronological argument of absolute value. It can be explained by the difference of literary schools to which the two poets are related; The naiveté of dramatic conventions contrast strangely with the robust and tightened texture of Kalidasa's acts: the place of action changes almost with every scene as our analysis shows; the intervals of time which action implies are passed over with brutal license; thus in the 9th act, the judge orders the usher to bring Vasantasena's mother in the tribunal; the usher goes out, speaks to her and brings her immediately. The summons of चारुदत्त is executed in the same manner. But the precepts of dramatic theory do not forbid the usage of these proceedings and it was impossible to omit them in a fable so parcelled out. The large number of प्राकृत dialects used in the play has often been considered as a proof of a antiquity, eleven personages speak शौरसेनी, two अवन्तिका; one प्राच्या and six मागधी; the शकार, the two चाण्डालs, माथुर and his associate make use of अपभ्रंश dialect; the Shakāri, cāndāli and Dhakki. Criticism enlightened by the works of Cowell, Weber, Garrez and Peschel on the history of प्राकृत recognises at this diversity the indication of a modern date. The most ancient of grammars, that of Varuruci, enumerates and studies only four Prācṛts. The refinements then introduced by theoreticians and poets have little by little increased this number by multiplying the divisions and sub-divisions. The division of प्राकृत among the characters of मृच्छ० absolutely coincides with भारत which assigns to each personage in a general rule the language of his country and which determines thoroughly in a precise manner the use of प्राकृत which have lost their local value. We have only one drama of the classical period in which appears the people of inferior castes. कालिदास has introduced in a scene in शाकुन्तल a fisherman, two policemen and the illegitimate brother-in-law of the King; he has not failed to write their characters in the dialects which their professions required. The variety of प्राकृत in मृच्छ० would not astonish us more certainly if we could read still other private theatricals of pure or miscellaneous kind, as for example the तरङ्गदत्ता of which the दशरूप has preserved us the title.

The same observation is equally applied to the two characters of शकार and विट. It is indisputable that their development in this play seems an anomaly, if we compare it with other dramas which we possess. But even this comparison is an error of method. The dramas and prakaraṇās of pure kind, like मालतीमाधव differ from मृच्छ० as much as the tragedies of Racine differ from the comedies of Moliere. It would be a method of absurd criticism to throw Moliere several centuries before Racine, because the character of Mascarille very much developed in the one is not met with in the other. And it is however upon an argument of the same kind that the high antiquity of शूद्रक has been established.

The ideas taken from the state of Buddhism in मृच्छ० are no longer decisive; the Buddhism has on the stage a share of conventions which the technics allow to it; the religious Buddhist regularly fulfilled in it the rôle of a mediator as in the tales: we shall see this tradition still respected in the beginning of 8th century by भवभूति. Besides, the religion of शाक्यमुनि was still flourishing in India in the middle of the 7th Century when हर्ष composed नागानन्द and when Hieun Thsang found a friendly welcome in various countries where he visited the holy places.

In short there is no ground at all to oblige us to place the author of मृच्छ before कालिदास whereas there appear several which seem to assign him a posterior date: silence of कालिदास and even the attribution of the play to the king शुद्रक. One is tempted to believe that the real author of this play lived after the glorious century of विक्रमादित्य and that to give it a superior prestige and an appearance of antiquity, he has placed it under the name of the king whom the legend celebrated as much as विक्रमादित्य and placed before his reign.

Whatever be the real date of this so-called शुद्रक, he ranks with the greatest of the dramatic poets of India, Kalidas. If the author of शाकुन्तल has an art more refined and more delicate, a profound knowledge and an infallible dexterity, शुद्रक has only to a degree less the power of creation and the gift of life. Each of the twenty seven personages who take part in the action, bear a particular mark, a special trait which strongly characterises him. चारुदत्त is one of those beautiful souls which glow in India under the combined influence of Brahminism and Buddhism. He knows enough of the nothingness of the world and the vanity of human things, to break off from it without regret at the time of death; but his heart is none the less open to all the serene affections; he fears to hurt or contradict his friend, the buffoon मैत्रेय; he honours his legitimate wife and watches over his son, the little रोहसेन with a touching anxiety; the love which he bears towards वसन्तसेना has no sensual warmth which is very often expressed by the heroes of Indian stage; he has felt the beatings of वसन्तसेना's heart, he has guessed in the courtesan a soul worthy of his own, purified by charity and sanctified by love. Lively as his passion is, he is still more anxious of his honour; he hesitates to confess to the judge his illegitimate connection, while he disclaims to defend himself against ignoble accusation which exposes him to capital punishment; his poverty is his crime; he knows it and submits to his destiny. He suffers only because of handing down to his son a soiled reputation and when स्यावरक arrives on the place of execution to proclaim the innocence of the victim, he accepts death as a good fortune. Nor is Vasantsanâ an ordinary lover. She has sold her body and beauty long ago and only bears the penalty of it. चारुदत्त and his wife alone appreciate the height of her sentiments. Others believe her to be carried away by a simple freak of senses and do not scruple to rail at and insult her; even the judge refuses to admit the sincerity of a similar attachment, and in spite of Charudatta's spotless reputation, he declares him on the evidence of simple presumptions, capable of having assassinated the courtesan interestedly. The शकार has no less originality and relief. It is a brutal person hardly cleared up by contact with विट whom he maintains; his title as king's brother-in-law, his riches and power seems to him as many indisputable rights to love or rather to the possession of वसन्तसेना; the disdainful refusal which ensues irritates him rather as a contempt of his claims than as an offence to his person. He is as brutal as coward, as cowardly as boasting and as ignorant as pedantic; his mind has resources only for a lie and perfidy. The विट is the most spiritual character or rather the only spiritual man of Indian stage. He has refined trick, delicate expression, gentlemanly demeanour of a very elevated person; he is welcome everywhere, everywhere people win him over and seek his society; but his is also a noble heart; he frees वसन्तसेना for the first time from the grip of शकार, tries to save her in the park, and disgusted with the violence of संस्थानक, he goes over to the camp of Âryaka by leaving his patron. The buffoon मैत्रेय compensates for his poverty of mind and his inclination to sensuality by his devotion to चारुदत्त; he regrets the good times when he ate plentifully exquisite food and dainties; but he remains faithful to the house and the master and is ever ready to render service inspite of his grumbling appearance; he wants to follow चारुदत्त dead; and only consents to live to watch over the son of his friend. We decline to characterise all the episodical figures whose traits are as firm and clear. शर्विलक, Brahman by birth and robber for love carries in the practice of his new profession the subtle and minute method of Brahminic school; the old shampooer, सैवाहक, who first tries to cheat at the game and runs away without paying his debt and who moved by Vasantsana's kindness has a sudden horror of his past life and puts on the gown of Buddhist monk, माधुर the proprietor of the gaming house, expert at player's tricks and whom neither the wit nor the prayers can soften, etc.....The names of Shakespeare and Moliere present themselves naturally to our thought when we read मृच्छ० and this comparison which obtrudes itself is a sufficient eulogy to शूद्रक.

मृच्छ० has not escaped the alternations of interpolations. A certain नीलकण्ठ of whom nothing is known save the name has claimed to correct the negligence of शूद्रक. The tenth act in the genuine copy ended without bringing together again all the personages; चारुदत्त's wife, his son and मैत्रेय did not appear at the ending. The author was afraid, if we believe Nilkanth, of sunrise. The reason urged is obscure enough. Wilson explains the expression as a proverbial one, of which the exact sense would be: To fear it might be wanting in some parts. The literal translation gives a sense equally acceptable and more precise. The staging seems to have been beginning at sunrise; if the spectacle lasted a long time people would be in the risk of being troubled by the excessive heat of the sun. The author of मृच्छ० would therefore have hastened the last scenes to shorten the representation. नीलकण्ठ who had nothing to absorb himself with the scenic necessities, has added by insertion a new picture. Charudatta's wife and son who have seen him start to meet his punishment and who think him dead already, are impatient of meeting him in heaven and mount the funeral pyre; मैत्रेय rejoins them. The cries of the crowd present at this triple suicide attract चारुदत्त, he arrives there in time to stop the fulfilment of the fatal project and to return joy to his people. The insertion is executed with cleverness; नीलकण्ठ imitates the style and process of शूद्रक but शूद्रक undoubtedly would not have consented to this insertion. An instinctive tenderness had determined him to keep at distance, the real and legitimate wife at the moment when the courtesan purified and ennobled becomes her equal. It is nevertheless interesting to state in the very act the work of interpolating these corrections imposed upon the masterpieces in the name of taste were a sort of approbation which sanctified their worth. The profanation by नीलकण्ठ certifies the glory of मृच्छकटिक.
